Low Temperatures Beating the Record.

Coldest Weather Experienced in Many Years.

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 6.—The thermometer at the engineer's office last night was 5 below zero, but the mercury went lower than that in some parts of the city, and considerably lower in the country districts of the state.

WOONSOCKET, Feb. 6.—Reports from this city and points in the Blackstone valley to the north indicate a range of from 10 to 18 below zero at an early hour this morning.

PAWTUCKET, Feb. 6.—At several places hereabouts this morning thermometers reached 10 below.

FALL RIVER, Feb. 6.—Last night was the coldest known in this section for many years. Thermometers registered from 4 to 6 below zero, and at 9 o'clock this morning had not risen above the zero line. A bitter wind from the west and north blew hard all night, but the river and bay were frozen over, despite the turbulent surface of the water.

There were three general alarms of fire after 6 o'clock and two still alarms. At the fire at the Borden residence seven firemen were overcome by the cold, and more than fifteen firemen and citizens are suffering from frozen ears, hands and feet today. The insurance on the residence was $4,500; furniture, $1,500; loss above insurance, $4,000.

SANDWICH, Mass., Feb. 6.—Cape Cod is experiencing the coldest weather of the season. The cold wave struck this section Monday night, and has continued through today. All day yesterday the thermometer registered from zero to 10 above, and this morning the mercury had fallen to 8 below. The trains were delayed yesterday by snow, which had drifted badly upon the banks in the vicinity of Wellfleet and other sections of the cape.

NEW BEDFORD, Feb. 6.—Last night was the coldest of the season, the mercury registering from 6 to 8 below zero. At 8 o'clock this morning it had crept up to the zero mark.

Harbor at Nantucket Frozen.

NANTUCKET, Mass., Feb. 6.—Last night was the coldest of the year here, the temperature going down to 1 above zero. The steamer has not been able to return from Woods Hol since Monday, and from the present outlook she may not get here for several weeks, as the ice is rapidly drifting into the bay. The harbor is frozen, and it looks as though Nantucket was to be again frozen in.

LYNN, Mass., Feb. 6.—Thermometers early this morning beat the record, marking from 4 to 12 below zero in various parts of the city.

ROCKVILLE, Conn., Feb. 6.—The temperature was at 15 below zero this morning; at Tolland 18 below, and other towns in Tolland county recorded 18 to 22 degrees below.

In Northern New England and New York.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Feb. 6.—The weather here this morning was the coldest for years, the glass ranging from 15 to 18 below zero. At the navy yard it was 10 below, and work was suspended for the day. The river between the navy yard and Kittery is frozen over, and the ferry-boat which plies between that place and this city was obliged to abandon its trips. In surrounding towns the mercury is reported to be from 15 to 22 degrees below zero.

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 6.—The coldest wave for many years swept over this section last night, and was accompanied by sharp, piercing, high winds. The mercury took a big drop, and this morning the thermometer registered from 18 to 25 below zero in this city. Reports from other places in this vicinity show a drop to from 12 to 28 below zero.

HANOVER, N. H., Feb. 6.—Thermometers hereabouts registered from 14 to 18 below zero this morning; at Lyme it was 18 below; Norwich, Vt., 18 below; Thetford, 17; South Framingham, Mass., from 8 to 16 below.

BOSTON, Feb. 6.—The following record of low temperatures this morning is reported from the points mentioned, the figures in every case being below zero: Bangor, Me., 12; Lewiston, Me., 12; Portland, Me., 10; Haverhill, Mass., 10; Lowell, Mass., 8; Manchester, N. H., 16; Concord, N. H., 18; White River Junction, 30; Calais, Me., 14; Machias, Me., 16; Ellsworth, Me., 10; Vanceboro, Me., 24; Fort Fairfield, Me., 10; Presque Isle, Me., 12; Caribou, Me., 10; Mount Kineo, on Moosehead Lake, 22; Greenville, 27.

MONTICELLO, N. Y., Feb. 6.—The cold wave struck Sullivan county yesterday, and the thermometer last night reached 18 below zero, the lowest temperature experienced here in many years.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 6.—The thermometer was 12 below zero in this city at 6 o'clock this morning, the coldest in eighteen years.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Feb. 6.—The thermometer registered 24 below zero this morning, the lowest in years.

New York's Coldest Since 1880.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Today was the coldest day since December 31, 1880. At 7 o'clock the temperature was 3 below zero. In the ferry slips and for about a quarter of a mile into the North river the ice was a solid mass. None of the Sound steamers had reached their piers at 10 o'clock. At the Fall River line a telegram from Whitestone reported one of the Fall River boats frozen in opposite that point.

Almost a Blizzard in the Northwest.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Feb. 6.—Despatches from thirty points west of here in Minnesota and the Dakotas indicate that a great storm is raging, at several places reaching the proportions of a blizzard. It is snowing here today, and a high wind has sprung up, in spite of the fact that the temperature is 14 below zero. Signal service reports are to the effect that it will snow pretty steadily for the next twenty-four hours, after which there will be a drop of ten to twenty degrees in the temperature.

The Lowest Yet.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 6.—At Grantsburg, Wis., yesterday, the mercury reached 50 below zero.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The modus vivendi between Spain and the United States, providing for low tariff on American imports to Cuba and Porto Rico, goes into effect today, having been signed by the queen regent yesterday. The rates under the new arrangement are the same as they were under the reciprocity conventions negotiated under the McKinley act.

SETTLED BY PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

Arbitration of the Boundary Dispute Between Brazil and Argentine.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The long pending boundary dispute between Brazil and the Argentine Republic has been decided by President Cleveland. The questions in dispute were originally submitted to the arbitration of President Harrison in 1889, and by him were turned to his successor. The cases were submitted to President Cleveland February 10 of last year. The subject of the controversy was the ownership of territory in the possession of Brazil, situated between Iguassu on the north and Uruguay on the south, St. Antonio and the Pepiry-Guassu on the west and the Jangada or St. Antonio Guazu and the Chapeco or Pequiri-Guazu on the east. The area is 11,822 square miles, and the population is about seven thousand. The territory is under the jurisdiction of Brazil, and the inhabitants have always paid a tax to that country, registered their lands there, and voted in the Brazilian elections for the state legislature and for the national congress. There are several towns and villages in this territory.

COMPLAINT DEFECTIVE.

Warrant for the Arrest of President Huntington Refused.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6.—U. S. District Attorney General Knight has received a communication from Attorney General Olney, sustaining Knight's action in refusing to issue a warrant for the arrest of C. P. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, on the charge of issuing an interstate pass to Frank Stone, a politician. Attorney General Olney says that the complaint of T. J. Roberts, an American Railway Union striker, who applied for the warrant, is defective, in that it did not state that the charge was made on information or belief. Mr. Olney advises Knight to lay the entire matter before the federal grand jury. This will be done at once, and Knight says that should the grand jury indict Huntington, a warrant for the arrest of another railroad president will be issued at once.

TURKISH PLOT FRUSTRATED.

Proposed Massacre of Christians in Trebizond Prevented.

BERLIN, Feb. 6.—The local Anzeigers correspondent at St. Petersburg says that the Turkish populace of the city of Trebizond, on the Black sea, lately planned the massacre of the Christian inhabitants on a certain night. The commander of the Turkish garrison in the city learned of the plot, and took energetic measures that prevented it from being carried out.

MARTIAL LAW EXPECTED IN BRAZIL

Discovery of a Conspiracy by Friends of Ex-President Peixoto.

Healy to Withdraw from the Parliamentary Committee.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—In consequence of the action of the meeting of anti-Parnellite members of the Irish party, yesterday, in ousting Mr. T. D. Sullivan from the parliamentary committee, and electing Messrs. Condon and Abrahams as new members thereof, Mr. T. M. Healy has signified his intention to withdraw from the committee.

CAPTURE CONFIRMED.

Rebel Leaders Wilcox and Newlen on Trial.

Hawaii's Queen Takes the Oath of Allegiance.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6.—Steamer Australia, from Honolulu, was sighted five miles out, at 7 o'clock this morning. She brings confirmation of the reported capture of Wilcox and Newlen, the leaders of the recent revolt, and also the arrest of the ex queen, who is a prisoner in the palace. The ex queen had renounced all her sovereign rights and the military commission was still trying the rebels. No decisions had been rendered.

The ex-queen, in her letter to President Dole, asked for clemency for those undergoing trial for treason, and concluded the document by taking the oath of allegiance.

THREATENED WITH STARVATION.

Families of Ohio Miners Suffering for Food and Clothing.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 6.—That two hundred and twenty-five families, averaging five persons to a family, are threatened with starvation was the message conveyed to Governor McKinley yesterday by a committee of three citizens from Rendville, Perry county. These 1,225 people are exhausted from want of food, and suffering from the wintry blasts, without shoes and clothing. The only mine in the neighborhood is the one where the main stays of these families were employed, and about ten days ago it was shut down indefinitely. Previous to that time the miners had been making on an average about $10 a month. The consequence has been that conditions are a counterpart to the distress existing in the Hocking valley. The persons in Rendville capable of giving relief have done all in their power, but their resources have become practically exhausted. W. P. Rend, owner of the mine, was in the city yesterday, attending a meeting of coal operators, and the Rendville committee called to see him. Mr. Rend informed them that there was not the least prospect of a betterment of conditions, as it was hardly probable that the mine would be re-opened before fall.

JUDGE GAYNOR'S LOGIC.

Organized Lawfully—but the Law is Wrong.

Connelly Says the Bosses Must Eventually Yield.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 6.—Judge Gaynor of the supreme court has written a letter to the state board of mediation and arbitration, in which he discusses the circumstances attending the Brooklyn trolley strike, and in which he says:

"In the immediate dispute which led to the conflict between the companies and the men, I see nothing worthy of serious attention. The dispute was too small not to have been settled easily, except for the inflamed condition brought on by the attempt to create vast inflated wealth on the one side being met by justly aroused uneasiness and apprehension on the other. Under healthy conditions the dispute would not have lasted an hour, if it arose at all

JUDGE GAYNOR.

"I remind you that in the case of the other large companies here, the same dispute was settled at once. Until the cause is removed, it is idle to try to prevent the effects. I submit this in the hope that it may promote thought and do some good."

He recites the history of the Long Island Traction company, telling how the little Brooklyn Heights railroad (a cable line four or five blocks long) leased the entire Brooklyn city system. He then tells how the Long Island Traction company, formed under the laws of West Virginia in March, 1893, with a paper capital of $30,000,000 without a dollar, a stick of wood or a steel rail at the back of it.

This corporation was formed, the letter says, by officers of the Brooklyn City road and shrewd Wall street men to control the Brooklyn city system. The manipulations of these men, Justice Gaynor says, caused the strike.

"They were forced to cut down all expenses, but, it is said," continues Justice Gaynor in his letter, "that all these transactions were strictly lawful. I admit it. They were in strictest accordance with statute law, as any court would have to decide. But what of that? Is the law always right in what it permits? If that were so, we would never need a change."

Justice Gaynor's letter was sent at the request of the arbitration board, and he asks it to be regarded as the opinion of a citizen, having nothing to do with his judicial position.

Connelly's Confidence.

Master Workman Connelly says that the strike is as far from being off as it was three weeks ago.

"We had about 150 applications for relief and passage home yesterday," said he. "These men were brought on from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago and Boston by the companies on whose roads the strike exists. They were found to be totally incompetent and were discharged. They appealed to the strikers for relief and sufficient money to pay their fares home. The strike leaders, however, refused to have anything to do with them.

"We had nothing to do with them," he continued, emphatically, "and we don't want to have anything to do with them. They did not leave the employ of the companies voluntarily; they were discharged, and we will not aid men of this kind. Any one who leaves the companies of his own accord will be well taken care of, will be fed and sent to his home if he wishes it.

"Things look brighter tonight for the men and the bosses must give in, for they are running the roads at a dead loss. Sympathy with the men is keeping the traveling public from using the trolley cars. The public will not patronize the boycotted lines."

Events of a Day.

Late yesterday afternoon, when car 1063 of the Flushing avenue line reached the corner of Driggs avenue and Leonard street, on its way down town, a crowd of about 50 strikers suddenly appeared, and notwithstanding that the car was full of passengers, began hurling stones and other missiles at it. A huge piece of iron went crashing through one of the windows, followed by a shower of rocks.

Special Policeman Bender, who was acting as guard to the car, was set upon by the rioters and beaten almost into insensibility. Several policemen went to the rescue, and Officer Bender drew his revolver and fired three shots point blank at the strikers. A number of arrests were made, and it was ascertained that several people had been severely bruised in the encounter, although none of them seriously.

Trolley car No. 1062 of the Cross-town line came into collision yesterday afternoon with a hearse that headed a funeral procession at the corner of Broadway and Wythe avenue. The hearse was completely wrecked, and the casket, containing the remains of a 2-year-old girl, was thrown into the street. The driver of the hearse was severely bruised by the fall, but the motorman escaped injury.

Our Red Brethren's Needs.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The sub-committee of the senate committee on the Indian appropriation bill has settled the dispute with regard to contract schools by striking out of the bill all the specific appropriations for denominational schools.

Alleged Conspiracy Unearthed.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Feb. 6.—It is reported that a conspiracy of Peixotists against the government has been discovered, and that martial law will be proclaimed.

Eighth Encampment.

NASHUA, N. H., Feb. 6.—The 28th annual encampment of the state Grand Army began here yesterday afternoon. Department Commander Pierce, in his annual address, denounced the pension policy of the administration. The actual gain in membership for 1894 has been 213; lapses by suspensions, transfers, discharges, etc., 480; making a net loss to the order in the state of 267 members. The total number of members in good standing Dec. 31, 1893, was 4903; on Dec. 31, 1894, 4636; remaining suspended the same date, 589. The principal loss comes from suspension, there being an excess of 212 over 1893.

The returns from 91 posts regarding finances show the balance in post funds to be $13,203.99; in relief funds, $8789.81; furniture, guns, etc., $26,966.55; real estate, $20,472.95; total, $69,193.35; loss during the year from 1893, $7303.88; amount expended for relief during the year, $2705.71.

The Aggregate Receipts of the department during the year were $3960.25; expenditures during the year, $1303.39; balance on hand Feb. 5, 1895, $2099.80. The expenses for the year 1893 amounted to $2316.15, a gain of $383.76 over last year.

The commander recommends the employment of a clerk at a salary of $500 a year.

One post, R. F. Cass 95, Plainfow, has surrendered its charter, etc., and has disbanded, owing to differences among comrades.

Commander Pierce criticises the action of some people in the observance of Memorial day, and hopes the time is near at hand when legal restraints will be placed upon that class of people who appear to be entirely lacking in veneration and sense of propriety.

The Soldiers' Home.

Of the Soldiers' home, he says: "By the last report of the board of managers we find that 119 men in all have been inmates, and 85 have a constant home in the institution. I am convinced by extended and careful observation that the New Hampshire state home has no superiors, and that the homes in other states would do well to imitate the wise and liberal policy which governs this beneficent institution.

The commander compliments the Woman's Relief corps on its work, and also that of the Sons of Veterans.

He further alludes to the attendance on the national encampment, and recommends that the setting apart of a sufficient sum for the payment of official expenses be continued.

The commander closed with an expression of thanks for aid and assistance received from comrades and officials.

ON BEACON HILL.

A bill was introduced providing that whoever uses opium, or any compound or mixture containing opium, or any of its preparations, by smoking or inhaling, or shall use it himself, or sells, or permits another to use upon his premises, in any way, opium or any mixture containing opium, the use of which is intended to cause delirium, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, one-half of the fine so recovered to be paid to the informant.

From the North Pole.

BOSTON, Feb. 6.—It was a zero night here last night, the mercury reaching the cipher mark at 10 o'clock. It continued to drop steadily, and at 6 o'clock this morning stood at 10 below.

Many towns and cities tell of the cold and winds as follows:

Newport, R. I.—The mercury was barely above zero. Heavy seas swept down the bay and across the harbor, interfering with steamboat travel and compelling shipping to put out extra anchors.

South Framingham, Mass. — Steady gale; snow blockade; street cars suspended; express trains delayed; zero.

Lynn, Mass.—At midnight the thermometer registered 3 below zero, and had been steadily falling for several hours.

Chatham, Mass. — Fierce gale; coldest night of winter; ships all anchored and badly iced.

Concord, N. H.—The mercury hovered about zero all day, and at night sank to 6 below.

St. Johnsbury, Vt.—Worst day of winter; below zero; roads blocked.

Nantucket, Mass.—Heavy gales; zero.

Northfield, Vt.—6 degrees below.

Portland, Me.—4 degrees below.

Going to Supreme Court.

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 6.—A conference between Judge Aldrich and counsel in Warren F. Putnam, convicted of embezzling property of the National Granite State bank of Exeter, was held yesterday, and a writ of error was allowed so that the question at issue may be carried to the supreme court. Bail was fixed at $10,000 pending the settlement of the legal questions. Putnam's friends furnished bail.

Big Money For Few Minutes' Work.

MALDEN, Mass., Feb. 6.—The office of the Boston and Maine railroad at the Saugus branch station was robbed yesterday. The office was entered either by use of skeleton keys or the door was accidentally left unlocked.

Employes Were Remembered.

SYRACUSE, Feb. 6.—Surrogate Glass has entered a decree ordering the special bequests under the will of the late Millionaire Crouse paid forthwith. These amount to $483,000, with one year's interest at 6 per cent. The special bequests were made to the people in Mr. Crouse's employ. The estate is valued at $4,000,000.

Needs Careful Consideration.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—The question of the removal of the names of Wormser and Heinsheimer from the original petition asking for receivers for the Whisky trust was brought up before Judge Grosscup yesterday. Judge Grosscup wished to go into the matter more thoroughly, and the matter went over.

Bought by Reorganizers.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 6.—The Western New York and Pennsylvania railroad was sold at auction yesterday. The road was bought by Frederick Straus, representing the reorganization committee which holds $20,000,000 of second mortgage bonds. The assets and liabilities are both put at $71,587,709.62.

Crushed by Falling Timbers.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Feb. 6.—An iron bucket, loaded with rock, was being hoisted up the shaft at Ashley, when the guide holding the bucket in position became loose and fell down the shaft. Two men were struck by the falling timbers and fatally injured.

To Be Further Discussed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The ways and means committee of the house yesterday discussed the bill to abolish the free zone of Mexico and the question of the Behring sea seal fisheries. No final action was taken, the committee desiring further information.

Accounts Were Not Straight.

A BURGLAR ALARM.

Mr. Reuben Goldsmid was a prosperous man. He had a dingy little office in Bretton Garden, the chief furniture of which consisted of two huge safes, which always contained enough diamonds, polished and in the rough, to adorn a court.

Mr. Reuben Goldsmid had very little to trouble him, but even the most peaceful lives have their period of unrest, and trouble came to Mr. Goldsmid in the shape of a kindly circular from Scotland Yard.

It warned him that the enterprising burglar was on the warpath in the London suburbs, and that detached houses "standing in their own grounds" were specially liable to his attack.

As he went to town that day his attention was attracted by the talk of two of his fellow travelers.

"Fearful business, this burglary at the Bulgarian ambassador's," said the stout man. "Where are the police?"

"That's just what I want to know," said the tall man. "In my country, if a chap goes burgling in a city, why, the police run him to earth pretty quick, and if he tries that game on in the country you bet he soon has the regulators on his track and finds himself strung up to a telegraph pole."

"All very well talking," said the stout man gruffly. "I've heard of American burglaries before this."

"See here," said the tall man, "an American burglar has a lot to do before he gets inside a house. Your idea here seems to be to have locks that you can pick with a crooked nail and window catches you can open with a butter knife. I should like to rig up a house and make it safe and run some of your clever burglars fooling around trying to find a way in."

Mr. Goldsmid could keep silence no longer. "I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "but I really should like to have a talk with you. To tell you the truth, if you can help me to put my house in something like a tolerable state of security, I shall be most grateful. I am most anxious, I assure you. Here is my card."

"And here is mine, sir. I'm happy to make your acquaintance, Mr. Goldsmid, and I shall be glad to help you."

Mr. Goldsmid took the card and read, "Cyrus F. Trotter, Mechanical and Electrical Engineer, 251 West Fifteenth street, New York."

After lunch Mr. Trotter took the diamond merchant to a half dozen shops and offices to show him various engines of destruction and mechanical devices which he must purchase in order to "fix up" the house at Highgate.

Mr. Trotter was busy for nearly three days putting his appliances in position. Then he dined at Highgate and showed Mr. Goldsmid how, by merely turning a button behind the hall door, all his apparatus was put in full working order, while by turning it back again the whole would be turned out of gear.

Mr. Goldsmid slept comfortably that night and felt like a man who is beyond the reach of the dangers that afflict ordinary mortals.

Next day he was called away to Amsterdam on important business. He sent a telegram to Mrs. Goldsmid telling her that if he were not back by 6 p. m. on Tuesday she was not to expect him till the next day.

Tuesday found him on his way home, but it was foggy in the channel, and it was midnight when he arrived.

He made his way up the foggy lane, glad when he found his own gate. He could see that gas was burning dimly in the hall.

He turned the key. He pushed the door open, and there was a pleasant feeling of being safe at home, when as his foot crossed the familiar threshold he heard somewhere the jingling sound of an electric bell. Then there was a whirring noise of clockwork half way up the stairs in front of him, and he had barely time to remember all that Mr. Cyrus F. Trotter had done before his departure when from the stair came a long bright flash, a ringing report and a whistling ball.

Grr-r-r, went the clockwork! Then in another second flash, bang, whiz, crash, and a shower of splinters flew from the door he had just opened, and poor Mr. Goldsmid realized that the "domestic gatling" had come into action.

He dashed wildly into a mass of shrubs. Suddenly there was a sharp snap. He felt a stroke below his knee which nearly broke his leg; he was safe in the iron grip of the beartrap!

After what seemed an age he heard a police whistle.

"Hello, there!" said a gruff voice, "What's the matter?"

"Burglars—a whole gang of them!" and he recognized the well known voice of his trusty loan servant Higgins. "But the American Lautermatic happeratuses that master fitted up before he went away frightened them all off."

Mr. Goldsmid ventured to call out "Higgins!" he shouted, but he was short of breath. The two policemen drew their staves and dashed into the shrubbery.

Snap went beartrap No. 2. "Hang it!" shouted policeman No. 973 as he rolled over.

His comrade was stooping over Mr. Goldsmid, flashing his bullseye in his face.

"Help me up," said Mr. Goldsmid. "I'm caught in a trap. Call Higgins here. Get me out of this, I say."

By this time Higgins had mustered up courage to advance into the shrubbery. With some difficulty the two captives were liberated from the beartraps, and Mr. Goldsmid was not to be seen at Hatton Garden for two days after his adventure.

Mr. Cyrus Trotter called on him in high glee the very he reappeared at his office.

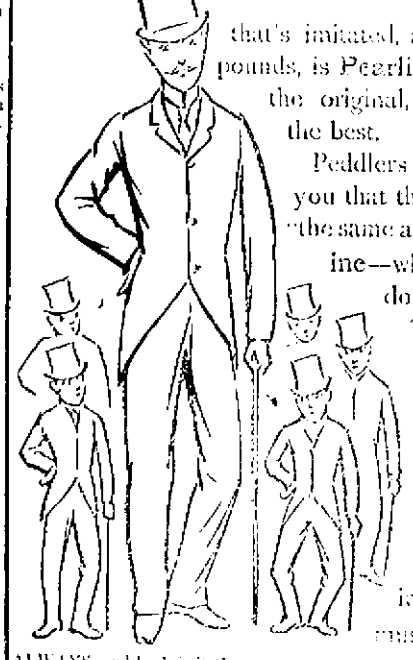

"I reckon," he said, "my fortune's made. Why, the apparatus fitted splendidly. It's got into all the papers, and I shall have no end of orders from your aristocracy and gentry."

"You may take all your 'fixings' out of my place and give them to the man who wants them. I would sooner have the burglars any day. I don't blame you, but you nearly killed me at my own door."

"Well," said Mr. Trotter solemnly, "if you don't like the fixings, why, I'll alter them, but don't blame me next time you are burgled, that's all."—Tit-Bits.

Peddlers and some grocers will tell you that this thing or that thing is "the same as" or "as good as" Pearline—what better recommendation do you want for Pearline? They tell you this because it pays them better to sell these "same as" stuffs. But how will it pay you to use them? Anything that they can offer you, in prizes or prices, can be only nominal. SEASONABLE NOTES.

The little "hen woman" is making a great success with her poultry. While the fowls are still pets in a degree, the business instinct of the age has developed in their mistress, and she cherishes them with the aid of the best hen-science and her own vigorous common sense. The result is that with a flock of only thirteen hens and a rooster she gets an average of six eggs a day so far through this winter, and this in a colder place by far than our island—in a town where the snow has been steadily on the ground since the first of November.

This is the result of judicious management. A friend who has a large place in the outskirts of the same city, and superior quarters for the poultry, has a flock of ninety fowls that are left to the care of a man, and the average yield of eggs is two a day. This is an aggravated type of fowls "eating their heads off." When you compare six eggs a day from fourteen fowls, and two eggs a day from ninety, and think of the expense for feed being almost five times more for the two-egg flock than for the six-egg flock, the little "hen woman's" triumph is almost as great as the human mind can take in.

It is worth while for those who "keep chickens" to know how she does it. In the beginning of her youthful career, while still the fowls were pets, every chicken yard about was visited, and notes of success and non-success taken and kept in her heart. A subsequent subscription to one of the best of the poultry periodicals furnishes suggestions for what has not been learned by observation. The important things, she says, are to keep the fowls warm, clean, busy, fed with proper food and young.

To take up the last point first, the little "hen woman" finds that a hen lays fewer eggs each year of her life, and not only this but that after the first year a hen's appetite almost doubles. Therefore she has no use for a hen over a year old except for fattening and selling as soon as possible. This seems harsh, but business and sentiment are like oil and water, and it is wise to drop one when you take up the other.

The food question is very serious. The average man suddenly finding a chicken yard on his hands would hasten to buy a bushel or two of corn, and scattering that out three times a day, think it was all sufficient. The little "hen woman" says he could not do a worse thing if he wanted eggs. Corn-fed hens, it seems, do not lay. A little corn given at intervals, something as you give sweets to the baby, is all that is allowed in a well conducted hennery. The diet served by the little "hen woman" is something like this: In the morning early there is a bowl of scraps in a hot mash. The scraps are what is left from the table the day before. Coffee and tea grounds and any sour refuse is left out. Potato skins are boiled. The mash is made of equal parts of corn meal, shorts and wheat middlings with boiling water poured over them, and a little salt added. Three times a week a half-teaspoonful to each hen of meat meal is added. Once a week, when the hens are laying well, about two heaping teaspoonfuls of a Condition powder are put in the mash. This is breakfast.

At noon oats and barley are fed. At night wheat is scattered in the chaff, and, if it is very cold, a little corn. Green food, like cabbage and clover hay—the last steeped in hot water—is administered frequently. A cabbage head hung just out of standing reach of the fowls helps keep them busy, as they jump and peck at it.

The drinking water is given in winter fresh and warm three times a day. Of course the diet is changed with the seasons, and is of a different nature when there are young broods of chickens, but it is of hens in winter weather that this is written.

And there is another thing that by no means must be forgotten for fowls in winter quarters, and that is a supply of grit. You may think, if not closely acquainted with Biddy, that she is furnished with teeth, and chews up her food in the usual way, of man and beast, but this is an error. A hen's food finds its way down to what may be compared to the interior of one of those old wind-mills now becoming so sadly scarce on the isle of Rhode. The hen's grind-stones are the flakes of rock that must be supplied her in winter when no gravel-bed is accessible. And the scientific keeper of hens provides winter and summer alike a quality of grit that gravel does not furnish, sharp-edged stone crushed for the purpose. One hundred and nine tons of this grit were shipped by a New Hampshire firm, who furnish this boon to chickens, in one week of the winter, which shows an increased knowledge, throughout the land, of chicken needs.

The fowls must be kept warm. A chill is one of the things that affects a poultry-yard income most unfavorably. Therefore, in all this cold weather, and while the snow is on the ground, Biddy must stay in the house, and what ventilation the house gets at night must be given by openings at the bottom and not at the top of the house. To keep the fowls warm, clean and busy in winter requires care, but with system it can be done. In a case like this where there is but one room in the hen house, the little "hen woman" before a house-cleaning in cold weather, may be seen hurriedly crossing the yard fourteen times, and on each trip conveying a fowl to the furnace-heated home cellar. Here they stay in very close quarters till the hen house has been shovelled and swept out, and a few barrelsful of the chaff found under has been replaced what was unclean. Working over this chaff keeps the fowls at work, and their activity is increased by the grain being thrown on the chaff, and shaken well down into it.

And, fortunate in their mistress, these fourteen fowls kept warm, clean, busy, properly fed and young are paying their way and far more through the hardest hen months of the year. It proves the truth of the statement that it is more profitable to have a small flock than a large, at least with the past methods of hen culture, but shows that the trouble has been that the larger the flock the more neglect there was to each hen. With the new ideas of system, and that it is not worth undertaking more than can be carried out well, there will be more economy in chicken raising.

If any one thinks that fourteen fowls well taken care of absorbs all the time of one person he is mistaken. The little "hen woman" is progressing finely in her preparation for college, goes to dancing school, takes music lessons, and finds time for much coasting down the snowy hill, and knows the click of [illegible]

CITY COUNCIL.

Important Matters Under Consideration.

The first regular meeting of the City Council since the present city government was inaugurated was held last evening, and it was evident from the proceedings that those who thought that this year would mark the breaking up of the partisanship which has been disgraceful in the city government for the past few years were correct in their conclusion. Neither branch of the City Council has a majority of members acquainted with the political history of the city or a knowledge of the various laws and customs that make up its ungovernables, but it is evident that, for a time at least, the needs of the city rather than the success of a party line are likely to prevail. The chief features of the session were the "hum-drum" given the highway committee on the Thames street widening and the clash of the highway department, the entire work ordered for the police and fire departments, and the quietness in the board of aldermen. The mantle of oratory, which has rested upon the board for several years, appears to have been transferred to the lower branch. There was considerable business done, and it was quickly transacted. Every member except Councilman Townsend was in his seat, and though the aldermen had opportunities for several quiet smokes the council was kept busy during the entire session.

The report of the committee on fire department recommended an increase in the salary of the driver of the emergency wagon, to $90 a month, the same as the men of the company now receive, as the driver sleeps in the house and has considerable work to do; also that one additional man be elected to the emergency force, at $90 a month, as with the present force whenever the wagon is out on a still alarm there is no one left at headquarters to respond to another call. In accordance with the request of the finance committee for recommendations for work of a permanent character, to be met by the issue of bonds, the committee recommended the appropriation of $2,000 for a chemical engine, $0,000 for No. 5 house, and $1,100 for an extension on the rear of No. 7 house. The committee also recommended the finishing of the upper story of No. 1 house, at a cost of $600, and the purchase of a new hose reel for No. 1 company, for $700.

In accordance with the recommendations of the committee, resolutions were adopted authorizing the board of firewards to purchase a new hose reel and to finish No. 1 house, at the figures named.

In accordance with the same report an amendment to section 14 of chapter 16 of the city ordinances, in relation to the fire department, was adopted, changing the salary of the driver of the emergency wagon from $50 to $90 a month.

A communication from the board of firewards, nominating Charles S. Frostburn as the extra man for the emergency force, was received.

The report of the finance committee recommended that the petition of the Grand Army posts for an appropriation for Decoration Day be granted, and that action be taken on the petition of E. Schreier and others in relation to the Touro funds, so that they may be used for the conduct of worship as well as for the care of the synagogue. The report was accompanied by two resolutions, one appropriating $300 for Decoration Day, and the other authorizing the city solicitor to apply to the General Assembly for such changes in chapter 70 of the Public Statutes, relating to the Touro fund, as will allow the proposed use of the income from these funds. Both resolutions were adopted.

Finance report No. 1 was presented, and the several amounts ordered paid, as follows:

City Asylum	$366 01
Poor Department	650 16
Watch and Police	377 73
Fire Department	641 17

A petition was received from John Melville and others, asking that a deed of Bradford avenue be accepted. It was referred to the highway committee, the street to be accepted when the deeds shall have been approved by the city solicitor.

A petition from Rev. E. L. Buckey and others, for a street light at the corner of Washington and Willow streets, was referred to the committee on street lights.

An ordinance was presented by Alderman Hammett, providing for the appointment of the clerk of the highway department by the street commissioner instead of having that official nominated by the highway committee and approved by the council in joint convention; the clerk to do all the work now required of the clerk of the highway department, to receive $75 per month, and to give a bond to the street commissioner for a sum not in excess of $5,000, to be approved by the commissioner; the clerk to be removable during the year by the commissioner, subject to the approval of the council. This passed the board of aldermen without a murmur, but caused much oratory in the lower board, where Mr. Hamilton started the ball by saying he didn't like that kind of business. He believed in doing what the citizens wanted done. They are all "kicking" about the expenses of the city. The street commissioner gives bonds for paying the men, and places that and much other work on the clerk. The people do not look to the clerk but to the commissioner. This looked like another catch like that of last year. Mr. Carr thought the ordinance inconsistent. If the commissioner could appoint without confirmation by the council he should have the power to discharge without the council's approval. Mr. Vaughan said he knew nothing about the ordinance until he read it in the Daily News, when he at once approved it. There is more politics put into the election of a clerk of the highway depart-

IN LOVING MEMORY OF E. K. S.

February 6, 1892.

Not now, but in the coming years—
It may be in the better land—
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, some time, we'll understand.

We'll catch the broken threads again,
And finish what we have begun;
Heav'n will the long mystery explain,
And then, an thou, we'll understand.

We'll know why clouds instead of sun
Were ever many a cherish'd plan;
Why song has ceas'd when voice was hush'd;
'Tis there, some time, we'll understand.

Why what we long for most of all
Eludes so oft our eager hand;
Why hopes are crush'd and castles fall,
We there, some time, we'll understand.

God knows the way, He holds the key,
He guides us with unerring hand;
Some time with tearless eyes we'll see;
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand.

MOLLIE REJOICES.

I thank my stars I'm not a cow;
I really, truly do:
With naught but grass to eat all day,
And naught to say but "Moo!"

For instance, if the donkey came
And asked me how I did,
I'd have to answer him with "Moo!"
Just like a little kid.

Or if the dog barked at my heels,
As he would do, just to bit,
The same old word would have to do
For "bow, bow, wow, get out!"

No matter what I wished to say,
The same 'would be all through;
My conversation would be limited to "Moo-oo-ook!"

—[Harper's Young People.

FANCIES.

I kissed her hand, my heart was all aglow—
I kissed her mouth—knew all the magic know:
I married her! 'Twas fain does favors give,
For, since that hour, "from hand to mouth" we live.

—[Brooklyn Life.

Ada—I can't imagine how that secret leaked out?

Ila—Nor I; I'm sure every one to whom I told it promised to say nothing about it.—[Puck.

Harold—I can always tell a fisherman's house down on Cape Cod.

Papa—How can you tell it, Harold?

Harold—Why, because it is smudged all over like a fish.—[Harper's Bazar.

"Men are such inconsistent creatures," sighed Mrs. Witterby. "It was only the other day they were enthusiastic about smashing the machine at the polls, and now I see they are going to vote by machinery. What won't they do next?"—[Brooklyn Life.

Mildred—I wouldn't have accepted him if he had not made such a perfectly dreadful threat.

Blanche—What did he threaten to do? Commit suicide?

Mildred—Worse than that! He threatened to marry some one else.—[Puck.

"I do not wonder," said the extremely gallant man; "that women object to telling their ages."

"Indeed?" responded Miss Passeigh, a little suspiciously.

"Not a bit. They naturally dislike to have their veracity doubted, and they know that no one could believe from their looks that they are as old as they say they are."—[Washington Star.

On a Virginia farm two small colored boys who were hired to weed onions were started at opposite ends of a row, and told to weed toward each other.

"I's done mo'n what you's done," said Dan, presently.

"No, you 'ain't nuther," asserted Sam.

"Yes, I is, doo," glancing down the row. "I's lot's nearer to yo' dan yo' is to me."—[Harper's Bazar.

PERSONALS.

....Robert Louis Stevenson's love of adventure was inherited from his mother, a Scotchwoman, who revelled in Wilson's "Tales of the Border" and gloried in adventure.

....The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine P. Kimball, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David P. Kimball of Boston, to Mr. John Hansen Rhoades, Jr., of New York. Miss Kimball is considered one of the beauties of Boston. Mr. Rhoades was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1892.

....Mrs. Morton will give her last afternoon reception before Lent this afternoon. A small dance will be given at the executive mansion February 8 by Mrs. Morton for her debutante daughter. The governor and Mrs. Morton have issued invitations for a card reception for Wednesday evening, February 13. The legislative reception at the executive mansion will be given Wednesday evening, February 20.

....The members of the Confederate Veterans' Association of the District of Columbia are arranging to give a reception and testimonial the latter part of this month to "Dan" Emmett, author of the tune and song "Dixie." The venerable retired minstrel is living in straitened circumstances in Mount Vernon, Ohio, and will be eighty years of age May 20. He wrote the song in 1843, when he was one of the original four of Bryant's Minstrels, who played that year in the old Park Theatre, in Park Row, New York. The other three of the "big four" were "Dick" Pelham, "Billie" Whitlock and "Joe" Sweeny, all of whom are dead. Old "Dan," whose full name is Daniel Decatur Emmett, expects to be present at the reception. It is a curious fact that nearly all the best songs that have become famous as Southern melodies were written by Northern men.

....The Washington Post says: William Randall Cremer, member of Parliament, who has been at the Capital in the interest of his measure to settle all disputes between Great Britain and the United States by arbitration, has been a frequent visitor on the floors both of the House and Senate. This is a courtesy not extended under the rules of Congress, but simply by general consent, and as an act of courtesy forms a striking contrast to the practice of the English Parliament, to the floor of which members of the American Congress are not admitted either under the operation of a rule or the stress of vanity. An American member of Congress is lucky when in London if he secures a seat in what is known as the "gallery of distinguished visitors." The American ambassador has placed at his disposal two seats a day, which, owing to the presence of numerous Americans in London at all times, compels him to exercise all the diplomacy of his nature to divide so as to satisfy at least partially the demand of his visitors. When Representative Carlisle was in London, some years ago, the American Minister had no alternative, in order to place him where he could witness the doings on the floor of the House of Commons, but to write a special to the Speaker for seats, which was answered with a card admitting the American Representative to the Speaker's private box.

Unlike most proprietary medicines, the formulas of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla and other preparations are cheerfully sent to any physician who applies for them. Hence the special fit of accredited and well-known standard remedies by the World's Fair commissioners.

THE BROOKLYN RIOTS.

The action of the Brooklyn board of aldermen and the letter of Judge Gaynor as "a private citizen," help to explain the origin and continuance of the Brooklyn riots. The Daily News stated at the time that but for the aid and comfort extended to the rioters by outsiders, including city officials, the mob could have been put down in as many days as it took weeks under the methods pursued; and that, too, without anything like such a military display as was made before the country. These later developments go to show that we were not mistaken.

It is now apparent that the strikers were encouraged in their methods by reputable citizens, because of the hatred which those citizens bore to the offending railroad corporations. From all that is made to appear, there is just cause for complaint against the companies involved. They are shown to be largely speculative in their make-up and methods, and quite regardless of anybody's interests but their own. As to matters in dispute between the corporations and their employes, the strikers were plainly in the right, and had they not resorted to violence they would have had an outside moral and financial support of the utmost value. They would probably never failed to regain their positions after having once vacated them, as they have done now, but their failure would not have been crowned with dishonor as it is today.

In the present condition in the labor market, it is a dangerous proceeding for men to throw up their positions for any cause. There is scarcely an employer who cannot hire all the help he wants many times over, so that wherever a strike is resisted there is small chance of its success. It is now apparent that the strike of the Brooklyn car men was a mistake, however much they were oppressed. It is a burning shame to the employers that they refused to listen to the complaints of the motormen and conductors, and to redress their wrongs; and they should be made to feel the weight of public opinion in disapproval of their acts. They have suffered severely from their selfish obstinacy, and may be made to suffer still more. But it must be by lawful means, such as are at all times open to the public.

THE FINANCIAL MUDDLE.

One cannot make a good fire with old coals at the bottom of the grate, nor can we expect wise financial legislation with defunct party leaders at the base of operations.

No legislation will bring to the country the needed relief, which does not make ample provision to meet the demand for gold to be made upon the treasury, and which does not provide for the redemption of the outstanding legal tender notes and silver certificates. An increase of revenue may enable the government to obtain the gold, but it will not necessarily keep up the supply in the treasury unless the dues are paid in gold. To meet the exigencies of the treasury it is therefore absolutely necessary to diminish the frightful calls for this metal.

The present course of business in connection with the United States is for the broker to take greenbacks to the treasury and procure gold for them. The treasury then re-issues the notes just taken in, when they may go into the hands of a second broker, who repeats the operation; and this process may go on indefinitely.

Such being the case, it is plain that no legislation is adequate which does not provide for the cancellation of these greenbacks or other gold securities whenever presented for redemption. At this point neither the President's bill nor Mr. Reed's substitute fully meets the case. Perhaps the necessity for compromise action stands in the way of right doing by the present Congress. The disposition of the mining states to force the public to take fifty cents' worth of silver for a hundred cents' worth of labor or commodities hinders progress in the right direction, and if this obstacle cannot be overcome the makeshift bond issues must go on indefinitely, as the best if not the only thing the present administration can do.

APPOMATTOX PARK.

It is not often that the conquered party, at the close of a war, joins in making the locality of its greatest and final defeat monumental. But it is to the credit of the South that, with few exceptions, the people make haste to do honor to Appomattox, the scene of Lee's surrender. They almost unanimously objected to the change of name when it was proposed by the Postoffice Department, and insisted that Appomattox should be historic in name as well as in fact.

It is to the credit of the people of Virginia that they take this view of the subject. The victory of General Grant over Lee was in reality in the interest of the South as well as the North. It made one people once again, sharers in a common prosperity and a common greatness. And men everywhere now see that in this unity the vanquished have as much to gain, and even more, than the victors.

And so the people of Virginia are earnest in their efforts to ornament and beautify the spot where the unnatural war was brought to a close. In speaking of the movement, the Richmond Dispatch says: "The Appomattox park scheme is in good hands, Lee Camp having undertaken to forward it, and for this purpose it will call into conference representatives of all the Confederate camps and Grand Army posts in Virginia. Pickett Camp and Phil. Kearny Post and all similar veteran organizations in this state will have an equal voice with Lee Camp in the matter. In due season a conference will be held, on the battlefield, to set on foot measures looking to memorializing Congress to do for Appomattox what it has done for Shiloh and Chickamauga. A visit to Appomattox by the conference, or a committee of it, will be indispensable, in order to determine what land Congress shall be asked to purchase." This is as it should be. Grand Army posts and Confederate army organizations of veterans join hands in the effort to make Appomattox one of the crowning monuments of the war. This is an exhibition of true patriotism on both sides.

MORE BONDS.

Ex-Speaker Reed has made financial legislation practically impossible at this session of Congress. His substitute bill, which runs along the lines of the Sherman resolve, is a fatal blow, for the Senate has already antagonized that measure. Mr. Reed must have known that if his bill should pass the House the Senate would at once proceed to kill it. The only purpose which its introduction can serve, therefore, is to embarrass the administration bill, and so prevent action of any kind.

Such being the case, the bond scheme will of necessity be carried into effect; and, all things considered, this is probably the best thing which can now be done. The time is too short for the evolution and adoption of a new national system of finance, and it is well to pass the matter over to the next Congress, when Mr. Reed and his political associates will be in command.

Governor McKinley's statement that he is not a candidate for the Senate has awakened considerable newspaper comment. There have been many friends and admirers who have thought he should be the successor of Brice; but the majority of them desire that he should be the next President of the United States, and prefer that he should not enter into a state contest. Governor Foraker has long been in the field for the Senate—indeed, was a strong candidate when Sherman was the last time elected, and could have beaten any other man in the state for that position. Perhaps this is Foraker's time.

We are in receipt of the first number of the Brockton Times, the new daily which has been launched on the sea of journalism by the well-known manufacturer and advertiser, Hon. W. L. Douglas. It is in good form as to shape and size, and established on a basis that should give any newspaper a long lease of life and abundant prosperity. The Brockton Times is to be "independent of party" and conducted "without national or sectional prejudice;" and it is scarcely necessary to say that with Mr. Douglas at its head it will be enterprising and interesting.

"The gold advocates may try never so hard to sit on silver and keep it down, it is bound to come to the surface and be used as money, as it has been since the beginning of the world. In other words, the business of this country has got to be transacted on a bimetallic basis," says the Republican Haverhill Gazette, every word of which is true. But it does not follow that in coining silver fifty cents' worth of the white metal should be made equal to one hundred cents' worth of the yellow.

"Ten years from today every railway line in New England will be paralleled by a trolley system," says the Woonsocket Reporter. It may be so, but if it is it will doubtless be the case that in many instances the same corporation will own and control both lines.

There is plenty of ice in the ponds at present, but it does not necessarily follow that the icehouses will be filled. Newport weather along these lines is very changeable, and the present cold wave is pretty sure to be followed by a warm one within a few days.

There is in Australia a legislative body, the members of which have recently voted to reduce their own salaries. They should be sent for as models for Massachusetts officeholders, nearly all of whom are holding out their little hands and asking for more.

The administration asks for a change in methods which will keep more gold in the treasury. Its demand is not for more revenue, as the treasury officials feel confident that the income from present indications will fully meet current expenses.

These are hard times for ocean steamers and coasters. A good many people are deeply concerned over the non-appearance of the La Gascogne, now some three days overdue.

Very few people who are familiar with the testimony in the Keegan case doubt the justice of the jury's finding.

The weather reports make one feel chilly today.

INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACES AT NICE.

A meeting of the committee having in charge the Mediterranean international yacht races was held at Nice on board Baron A. de Rothschild's steamer Eros, at which it was arranged to hold three races. The first will be for steam yachts over one hundred tons, no handicap, and distance fifty-three miles, the first prize being a five hundred pound cup and five hundred pounds, and the second prize a cup valued at two hundred pounds. This race will take place at Nice March 28. The second race will take place the following day and is for sailing yachts belonging to any recognized club, of over twenty tons, under the Yacht Racing Association's rules. This will be sailed over the Nice course, and the prize is a five hundred pound cup and five hundred sovereigns. The third race is a handicap for steam yachts over one hundred tons, and will take place April 1. Only those steamers that are entered or take part in the race of March 28 can compete. The conditions for this event will be the same as those of the first race.

These cups will be the property of the owners of the winning yachts in two successive contests, to be held each year, either at Nice in April, at Cowes during regatta week, at New York the week before or the week after the June regatta of the New York Club, or when the America's cup is sailed for, or at Newport in August during the squadron cruise of the New York Yacht Club, as may be decided by the yachts first winning them. These races must prove of great interest, and they will do much to place international yachting contests on a broader basis than ever before.—[New York Herald.

Dyspepsia Cured

"My wife has been a great sufferer with dyspepsia for over four years. Three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla have perfectly cured her. At times the lightest food would distress her terribly. She could not sleep well nights and she said no one could tell how badly she felt. She was also troubled with sick headaches. She had tried different kinds of medicine, but none did her any good. At last Hood's Sarsaparilla was recommended and one bottle did her so much good that she took two more and now she is perfectly well. She is not now troubled with any sick headaches nor bad feelings, can eat heartily and sleep well. To Hood's Sarsaparilla belongs all the credit." OTIS MERRITT, Addison, Maine.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50 cent bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6, 8 A. M.—For Massachusetts: Fair, followed by snow and probably slightly warmer Thursday afternoon in western portions; northwesterly winds.

For Rhode Island—Generally fair; continued low temperature; northwesterly gales.

FOR BOSTON AND VICINITY.

BOSTON, Feb. 6, 8 A. M.—Local forecast for Boston and vicinity until Thursday night—Fair; probably followed by snow Thursday; continued cold, followed by rising temperature Thursday; westerly to northerly winds.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS.

The present cold wave is general in all Eastern districts north of Virginia, and is the most severe of the season. It is expected to be very cold again tonight, unless clouds should gather. The following temperatures occurred last night (all in degrees below zero): Montreal, Quebec, 20; Northfield, Vt., 18; Buffalo, 11; Albany, 12; Portland and Eastport, 8; Boston, 6; New York city and Philadelphia, 2; Nantucket, zero. The weather will probably moderate slowly tomorrow followed by a snowstorm. Generally clear conditions prevail this morning in the East. Snow is falling in many parts of the interior of the country, and a storm is gathering energy in the Southwest. While this storm is not of much force as this time, it is likely to become a serious disturbance upon reaching here, especially if it moves to the coast and thence northward. Fair weather over the Northwest, attended by another cold wave of marked intensity, the temperature in all portions being many degrees below zero. The barometer is abnormally high in that region. A reading of 30.85 inches is reported from Calgary, Northwest Territory, which is probably the highest ever recorded there. The cold wave pale continues over New England and in the St. Lawrence valley. A flying wind velocity of forty-two miles occurred in Boston yesterday.

WINTRY BLASTS.

Last night was by far the coldest of the winter, and one of the worst for many years. The cold was intense, and the wind, blowing a gale from the northwest, added to the discomfort of those who were obliged to be outdoors. The temperature ... had not risen during the day, in the most favored localities, higher than four ... degrees above zero, began to fall rapidly as evening approached, and by 5 o'clock the thermometer registered 8 above; at 7:30 the thermometer at the City Hall ... 4 above, and at 9 o'clock was at 2 above. It had fallen to zero at midnight, and continued on its downward course to 4 below. In some parts of the city the temperature during the night was as low as 8 and 8 below zero, and at one place in Bath road 10 below was the figure reported. At 8 o'clock this morning the Daily News thermometer, which is quite conservative and rarely reaches the lowest point found in the city, registered 2 below, and that at the City Hall was 4 below. At noon there had been a rise of twelve degrees, and with the wind blowing less briskly the weather was not so disagreeable. At times last night the wind blew furiously, but no damage of importance is reported. The telegraph wires have not been seriously interfered with, and the fire alarm wires have given no trouble to the emergency ... y.

Steamer Providence did not arrive from Fall River until after 1:30 this morning. The storm was heavy, and the wind was from the west ... it was decided to hold the boat at Fall River until after midnight. Some of those ... on board said they had difficulty in keeping warm. The steamer proceeded to New York. Steamer Pilgrim arrived from New York this morning nearly on time.

The tide is unusually low today, and the harbor is covered with ice east of a line drawn from Washington street south, considerably beyond the head of Commercial wharf. The ice is not yet thick, but promises to be by tomorrow morning. The Jamestown ferryboat is landing at her own dock, but the Torpedo and Training Station launches are running to Long wharf. The float of the Training Station launch at Kinsley's wharf is sunk. The Anowon and Squidneck had no difficulty in ... through the ice.

Today seems to have been made for the ice men, but though ice is making fast on the pond it was too much like Arctic weather for the men to go to work, so nothing was done this morning except the freezing. This afternoon a number of men went to Lily pond to begin work if the conditions were favorable. No work was done by the ice cutters on Easton's pond this morning.

LOST OVERBOARD OFF POINT JUDITH.

Schooner Arlevilla H. Peary, from New York with coal for this city, arrived last ... today Captain Peary reported the ... of his mate, Peter Jansen, off Point Judith, about 7 o'clock last evening. The schooner was coming before a strong breeze, which blew about forty miles an hour, and the men were engaged trying to reef the spanker when the mate fell backward and overboard. There was a snow squall ... a heavy sea on at the time, and it was intensely cold. Jansen was ... after falling, but his companions on the schooner were unable to render any assistance as they could not get the schooner about and ... unable to lower a boat and try ... against the heavy wind that prevailed. The vessel was under reefed sail at the time, and had her sails slightly damaged in the blow.

The lost mate was a Dane, a resident of Philadelphia, about forty years of age, and leaves a widow and one child. He has been on the Peary about six months and was a good seaman. This is Captain Peary's first loss of a man during his life of seafaring.

If Mayor Strong of New York should give an unusually good administration, one reason will probably be his conviction, freely expressed, that he will never occupy another office in this world. Men who say this, and mean what they say, have a considerable advantage over the rest of the office-holding humanity.—[Brockton Times.

A RUBINSTEIN NIGHT.

Those who attended Mrs. T. W. Freeborne's musicale in January have been awaiting ... of other evenings with the great composers, and the fifty or more persons who last week received invitations to a "Rubinstein Night" at her home, 63 Broadway, on the evening of Tuesday, February 5, knew that another treat was in store for them. The programs, neatly ornamented and lettered in red and black ink, announced that Mrs. Freeborne would be assisted in interpreting this "idol of music lovers" by Mr. Alfred G. Langley, 'cellist and pianist; Miss Eda K. Martland, contralto; Mr. N. T. Hodson, tenor, and Dr. Frederick Bradley, essayist.

Rubinstein was one of the few musicians whose maturer years fulfilled the marvelous predictions of his early childhood, and is generally conceded to be the most famous and tried among contemporary followers of his art. His compositions include work in all the chief forms; and as a creator of music he stood very high, an element of the strange, the wild, the sad in his work giving it depth and distinction. He was fuller of melodies, richer in concerted and harmonic work, and more during and emotional in rhythms and motifs than all other modern writers of music; and his playing had not only technique, but wonderful tone-color and magnetism which produced electrical effects—truly, as has been said: "He was the greatest pianist of living composers, and the greatest composer of living pianists," and a story of his life could not fail to be interesting, especially when told by so pleasing a writer as Dr. Bradley. Rubinstein was but ten years of age when he made his debut in Moscow, and scarcely twelve when he went on his first concert tour, playing before Liszt and Chopin. At thirteen, his piano education was finished, and he had no other teacher except Dehn, under whom he studied composition for three years in Berlin. His earnings as a pianist have probably not yet been equaled, even by Paderewski, and his gifts to charitable institutions and needy musicians have been rivalled by very few. His monumental work was the founding of the Conservatorium at St. Petersburg, and he gave himself up to it almost entirely, except for brief concert tours.

Referring to the musical illustrations of last evening, Dr. Bradley said that the Three Pieces for Piano and 'Cello are thought to be delightfully melodious, and characteristic of the composer. Of the vocal selections, "Der Asra" is "one of a number full of Oriental coloring, a jewel of the purest water. * * * The last number on the program is one of a set of six pieces for the piano, and, as stated, Rubinstein's last composition. The No. 3 is "charming in its waywardness, and as liable to be depended on as a spoiled child. At the outset very well behaved indeed, it soon begins to show temper, strenuous progressions, jerky, rhythmical figures, abrupt tonal transitions, and then a wild burst of arpeggios, followed by a sudden return to sedateness. The episode in A minor is quite engaging, and includes a lively little Scherzando—the child at play, a piece of considerable length, closing with a return of the innocent and gentle leading subject."

The works chosen for illustration last evening were as follows:

a Moderato assai from the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 4, in D min., Op. 70. (Part of the movement, only.)
b Candle Dance of the Brides of Cashmere, from the Opera "Feramors."
Mr. Langley.

Der Asra.
Miss Martland

a Scherzo and Trio in A min. and maj., Allegro non troppo; tranquillo.
b Cradle Song, Op. 16. Moderato assai.
Mrs. Freeborne.

Du Bist Wie Eine Blume, (Thou art so like a flower).
Mr. Hodson.

Three Pieces for Piano and Cello, Op. 11, No. 2.
No. 1 Andante quasi adagio, a min.
No. 3 Allegro risoluto, A maj.
Mr. Langley and Miss Mabel French.

Two Romanzas for Piano.
a. ... in F
b. Andante con moto in E flat.
Mrs. Freeborne.

Forest Song.
Miss Martland and Mr. Hodson.

a. Spharenmusik, from the String Quartette in C min., Op. 17, No. 2.
b. Scherzo, from the String Quartette in F, Op. 17, No. 1.
Mr. Langley.

Es Blinkt der Thau (The dew is sparkling).
Miss Martland

Souvenir de Dresde, Six Pieces for Piano, Op. 118 (being Rubinstein's last composition), No. 3, Capriccio; moderato con moto; scherzando.
Mrs. Freeborne.

Mrs. Freeborne is one of Newport's musicians of the first rank, and in her comparatively few public appearances as a pianist has created a most favorable impression. Her five numbers on last evening's program were given to the delight of all present, the Scherzo and Trio in A minor and the Cradle Song being especially beautiful. Of Mr. Langley, who is so well known as a pianist of ability, it is difficult to say anything new in the way of praise. Last evening he proved a proper and popular interpreter of Rubinstein's string music. Of his piano selections the Scherzo from the String Quartette in F was the most taking, while the 'cello numbers, with Miss French as accompanist, were well received. The vocalists of the evening are well known as members of the Central Baptist Church Quartette. Mr. Hodson's voice, always one of great sweetness and purity, is steadily improving. The familiar but ever charming "Thou Art So Like a Flower" he was obliged to sing a second time, and the duet with Miss Martland was very enjoyable. Miss Martland has long been favorably known to Newporters as a choir singer, but she is also a soloist of superior merit, as was evinced by her rendering of Der Asra and "The Dew is Sparkling."

The evening throughout was both pleasurable and profitable. Mr. Augustus M. Swan and Mr. Philip Spooner acted as ushers. Mrs. Freeborne's next evening with the composers will be spent with Schubert, probably February 28.

JAMESTOWN.

[Regular correspondence of the News.]

Mr. D. C. Watson is circulating a petition, to be presented to the legislature, asking that a charter be granted the Jamestown volunteer fire department.

Professor Walker will lecture for the benefit of the Central Baptist Church next Friday evening.

The weather during the past twenty four hours is pronounced the coldest experienced in Jamestown for several years. The mercury fell last night, according to several thermometers, as low as 8 below zero. A number of men who work in Newport did not go over this morning, while those who did venture returned at noon, it being too cold to work. Ice is making very fast in Newport harbor, and with another day of such low temperature the steamer Conanicut will be obliged to land at the wharf of the Fall River line. The heavy westerly gale forced the water out of the bay, causing the lowest tide today seen for a long time, owing to which the ferry-boat could not near the bridge at her slip here on her 9:30 trip. Fortunately there were no passengers on board, for if there had been they would have had the unpleasant experience of landing on the piles.

Mr. Elijah Anthony, who is spending a portion of the winter in Providence, has been ill, but report today says he is better.

The well-known four-masted schooner Walter Arrington went up the bay today. The vessel was heavily coated with ice, but was making fast time under her four lower sails.

Mr. Isaac Clarke is today storing ice about eight inches thick. The ice men who were criticised for not harvesting several weeks ago when it was but six inches thick, think they have the big end of the icicle, after all.

ACCIDENT TO STEAMER GENERAL.

Yesterday, when steamer General arrived on her 1 o'clock trip, it was found that a piece of sheet iron on her rudder had been partly detached, and gave the rudder a fan like shape. An effort was made to pull it off entirely, but this did not succeed, and it was found necessary to keep the steamer at her dock. She is there yet, and the rudder is still unfit for use. It is not yet known whether the trouble can be repaired, without going on the dry dock. No mails have been received via Wickford since 1 o'clock yesterday. The Anowon went to Wickford landing today to bring the New York papers and mail, but returned without them, as they were sent around to Fall River. The Anowon brought six passengers and the Wickford mail.

THE FORESTERS' MINSTRELS.

The advanced sale of tickets for the Foresters' Minstrels has been so large that good houses for both nights seem assured. This, however, is not surprising, as a very large number of admission tickets were sold by members. As Company B will be unable to appear Friday evening, because of its inspection, the management has secured Cunningham and Duncan, a good knockabout team from Boston, to fill in the program. Several acts not yet announced will probably be added to the program each night. The end men are adding so largely to their stock of jokes that interlocutor Jennings is fairly overwhelmed by the mass of material which he will have to bring out. The song and dance work of the local performers promises to be very good.

TIVERTON.

Nonquit Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, has elected the following committees for the ensuing year:

Social Committee—Ralph B. Wilcox, Fernando A. Wilcox, Mrs. F. A. Wilcox, Willis Nutting, Edgar L. Barker, Mrs. E. L. Barker, John Schlegel, Miss Etta Schlegel, John A. Hathaway, Mrs. J. A. Hathaway.

Musical Committee—Jason W. Gifford, Mrs. J. W. Gifford, Andrew M. Cory, Edgar L. Barker, Mrs. E. L. Barker, Miss Sadie W. White.

Literary Committee—Andrew M. Cory, James A. Mansfield, Mrs. Fernando A. Wilcox.

Reception Committee—John A. Hathaway, George A. Brown, Etta C. White, Charles H. Potter, Mrs. C. H. Potter.

An entertainment called "Our Folks," a drama without a villain, is being rehearsed for the benefit of the Union Public Library.

A musical entertainment, varied with other attractions, is to be held soon at White's hall, the proceeds of which are to be bestowed on a much afflicted youth of this town.

LOCAL BRIEFS.

—Tugs Herald and Wrestler and a big collier are in, with tows.

—The C's and B's will give a social in the parlors of Channing Church this evening.

—The Prohibition state convention will as usual be held in Providence on February 22.

—One of the window show-bottles in Powell's drug store was broken by the frost this morning.

—Mr. O. B. Smith, agent, and Mr. Dudley McAdoo, manager for Kellar, are at the Perry House.

—Owing to the extremely cold weather, and the danger of accident to the heating apparatus, it is probable that the regular service at the First Methodist Episcopal Church will be omitted this evening.

—Councilman William C. Townsend fell on the sidewalk near the Redwood Library a day or two ago and split a small bone in his ankle. He is comfortable today, but will probably be confined to the house for several weeks.

—The funeral of the late Mary Corbett, who died at the hospital Monday from the effects of burns, took place from St. Mary's Church this afternoon. There was, despite the cold weather, a large attendance, and many followed the remains to the cemetery.

—Wrecking schooner Young America has been unable to go to the Eva L. Leonard, near Castle Hill, since Sunday last, when she secured about thirty tons of coal and one mast. There are about one hundred tons of coal still on the vessel, which is rapidly going to pieces. A part of the cargo remaining will probably be saved.

CITY COUNCIL.

ment than that of a mayor. There are several other offices that it would be a benefit to the city to have taken from the council's hands. Mr. Tanner thought the committee should appoint the clerk, subject to the approval of the council. The committee on highways ... bonds for the clerk's action, and should have the right of appointment. After the ordinance had been read four times by President Comstock, it was, on motion of Councilman Hughes, referred to the ordinance committee. The aldermen would not concur in this change and asked for a committee of conference, Alderman Hammett being appointed to represent the board. The council was not willing to agree to a conference, even though it was acknowledged that it would not be bound by its report, and so disagreed with the aldermanic action, and this killed the ordinance.

A resolution was passed, adding $255.25 to the police appropriation, for the purchase by the chief of police of suitable revolvers, shields and whistles for the police force.

The following resolution was passed: "Resolved, that the committee on streets and highways prepare and report at the next meeting of the council drafts for such new laws, ordinances and regulations as may be necessary or advisable relative to the construction of sidewalks, the maintenance and repairing thereof, the disposal of rain water overflow from roofs, eaves and leaders, the removal of snow and ice, the prevention of encroachments by porches, steps and other projections from buildings, the screening in of sidewalks and removal of obstructions to travel when building operations are in progress, the construction of trap and coal shutes, and such other matter for the public convenience in relation to sidewalks as may seem desirable."

The invitation of the naval reserves to the mayor and members of the council, to attend the social in the new armory February 22, was accepted.

Mr. Hamilton presented the report of the highway committee, which recommended a three years' term for the garbage collection contract, the laying of a sewer in Rhode Island avenue, between Kay and Champlin streets, as asked for by the abutters; the reference of the petition of T. T. Pitman and others to the board of aldermen, and that the aldermen be requested to lay out a water street. B. Clarence Brown was nominated for clerk of the highway department.

The report opened the flood-gates of eloquence in the lower board, and even before it was received the members were assailing the recommendations. The first proposition which was thoroughly ventilated was that relating to the collection of garbage. Some of the members knew who had put in the lowest bid for a one-year contract, and they talked right out in meeting. Mr. Vaughan said the city had an experience last year which ought to be a warning. He believed no one wanted a three-year contract under such conditions. Mr. Hamilton said the committee could get better figures on a three-year contract, as some men who have no plant would get one for a three-year job. Mr. Carr asked if the contractor did not give bonds, and what became of them. Mr. Sweeney said bonds were given, and the highway committee neglected to realize on them. It was the old story with city business, what was every one's was no one's. He advocated having the work done by a responsible man, at a reasonable price. Mr. Young said the council had ordered the work done by the highway department; he believed that is the proper way, as the lowest bidder is likely to slight the work. Mr. Hamilton said it was the fault of the street commissioner that the bonds were not prosecuted. Mr. Tanner said he was a member of last year's highway committee, and the street commissioner had done as he had been instructed. He would not throw the responsibility on the commissioner, for one fifth of

COLONIAL LEGISLATION.

England Considering Preferential Treatment as Against Other Countries

LONDON, Feb. 6.—In the House of Commons last evening, Mr. Buxton, parliamentary secretary to the colonial office, announced that the questions discussed at the Ottawa conference had received careful attention, and the government intends at the present session to introduce a bill to enable the Australasian colonies to enter into fiscal relations with each other and with Canada. The foreign office, Mr. Buxton added, is discussing how far Great Britain has power to give preferential treatment to the colonies as against other countries.

Whiskey Trust Bond Speculators Ready to Disgorge.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—The Herald says: Information was given out yesterday at the office of a prominent New York broker with close Chicago connections, that the favored few who bought $1,000,000 of Whiskey Trust bonds at fifty cents on the dollar, and paid themselves a commission of $90,000 for negotiating the sale, are ready to disgorge. As a preliminary peace offering they agreed to sell the bonds to the stockholders' committee at actual cost. This forfeiture of a clear half million was made without any intimation from Chairman Hartshorne that such a proposition was desirable or would even be entertained.

SHORT IN THEIR ACCOUNTS.

Irregularities in Nearly Every South Carolina Dispensary.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 6.—Governor Evans has found that nearly every county and sub-dispensary in the state is short in its accounts, and has begun to make things lively in consequence. Some of the dispensaries have been found to have shortages ranging from about $800 to $1,500. The governor has inspectors going through every dispensary in the state, and will require every dispenser who is short to give a satisfactory account of the shortage, or else he will be summarily dismissed and prosecutions and suits upon the bonds will commence immediately.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE CORRESPONDENT.

Legislation is naturally influenced by public opinion. Newspapers reflect and, in a smaller degree, mould it. The Washington correspondent gives the public his views, or those of the paper he represents, and often voices the sentiments of his own party leaders. There is little non-partisanship in journalism. The correspondent not unnaturally, often unwittingly, and sometimes purposely, colors situations. His writings mirror his own ideas or prejudices. His attitude on a public question is often peculiar to himself. It is generally dictated by the policy of the paper he represents. That depends on his personality and the degree of confidence imposed by his editor on his judgment. Usually the correspondent influences his paper and is affected by it. If he has served it for a length of time his ideas and those of the paper become the same. He generally writes what he believes. He is ordinarily a man of strong convictions, often pessimistic and cynical by reason of his experiences with the more selfish side of life. The average of honesty and integrity among correspondents is high. It equals that of any profession. They do not lobby, though there may have been isolated cases of it. Necessarily they often unknowingly misrepresent because of a lack of details, or incorrect information, sometimes given them by interested parties, for some Congressmen and Senators are not above using deceit for their own ends. Instances could be cited where they have misdirected newspaper men, seeking to create a favorable or hostile public impression of pending legislation. There is great temptation to paint a story and make it picturesque, to romance a little, that the dispatch may be the more interesting. It is the harmless tendency to resist, but it is no more unusual than the habit in ordinary life. As a rule the correspondent seeks to do right, to be fair. His work is hasty and under stress. He must judge on slight evidence, hear a thing, get new details, and often assume the rest. A suggestion sets a train of thought working; a conclusion is reached on a premise that may have seemed insignificant. Study of character, of legislation, of past events, of their sequence, of history, experience, guides him in his judgment. He is oftener correct than inaccurate. When he errs, he as a rule is quick to correct it. Though a newspaper correspondent, wittingly or unwittingly, misrepresents a public man or question, colors a story, or is unjust, the truth becomes known sooner or later. He may elevate a man temporarily or lower him. If a man be given the wrong place in public estimation, the error rights itself after a while. The weakness and incompetency of a man or his dishonesty soon becomes known if he is exalted too much. His honesty and ability are assigned their proper niche in public estimation if he is improperly placed. The newspaper correspondent serves to make a public man's abilities apparent or his shallowness known.—[Albert Halstead, in North American Review.

MRS. BEERBOHM TREE IN HER LONDON HOME.

Such a pretty, artistic picture she made, standing in the firelight, which shone on the quaint Eastern-looking tea jacket, edged with fur, that she wore, and glinted softly on the reddish masses of hair that clustered about the broad forehead. A beautiful grand piano, strewn with music, standing open within a convenient distance of the window, at once proclaimed Mrs. Tree's love for music.

"Yes," she said, "even my piano has its story, and a very domestic one! My husband gave me that during the successful run of 'The Dancing Girl.' He gave me my choice between a string of pearls and a piano, and I chose as you see. Pearls I love, but music is a religion with me. No," in answer to a question from me; "I have no special composer to whom I pay homage. Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Gounod—I love them all, and my tastes are entirely unbiased by enthusiasm. Wagner? Yes, of course, I reverence his genius and appreciate his powers, but I am not a blind follower of him. I sing, but not much, and my favorite songs are mostly German ones, although to Sir Arthur Sullivan and Tosti I am devoted. But there, you see how wide and general is my love of music—if it be good and real melody, that is all I desire. And I think that is my natural attitude toward most of the fine arts. In poetry my tastes are just as catholic. You can see on my book shelf that Swinburne and Shelley, Rossetti and Tennyson, Browning and Longfellow, all have their places, and each one of them appeals to me in some direct and beautiful way. I live with my books and my music, and they each endear themselves to me by their very variety and differences."—[The London Lady.

LEGENDS AND FACTS ABOUT THE ROSE.

True to its character as an emblem of silence, the rose maintains reserve in regard to its early surroundings. We know that the great much-doubled flowers that fill our gardens and greenhouses with such a range of color and form were never found "crowding that selfsame way out of a trifling wayside bush." The wild rose is always a frail, transient, open-natured flower, the type of simplicity. It might well have been dedicated to Aurora as an emblem of youth, but only the double rose, with curving petal after petal folding in its heart, can be the flower with which, as the myths have it, Cupid once bribed Harpocrates, the god of silence, not to betray the love affairs of Venus.

To China, India, Persia, and the whole Orient in fact, may be traced many of the best-known strains of our cultivated roses. For some reason, America is poorer in natural species than is the eastern continent, and this, together with the fact that rose culture was well established across the water before gardening was begun in America, accounts for our having so few varieties of roses developed from native species.

The prairie or Michigan rose is the only American kind from which cultivated varieties are known to have come. The Messieurs Feast of Baltimore raised seedlings from it in 1836, and among them were the Queen of the Prairies and the Baltimore Belle, two vigorous old-fashioned climbers that old-fashioned people still love; though they have been much supplanted by climbing hybrids and teas. Of the two, the Baltimore belle is the more delicate in form and in constitution, seeming to show traces of Noisette blood, but they are both so hardy and grow so rapidly that they will never quite lose favor until some of the more finished varieties have been produced with strength equal to their beauty.

It was chance that used to watch over the origination of new roses, and though gardeners do much systematic work with seedlings at present, chance is still busy, and sometimes has better results than foresight; one school of gardeners thinks she always has. A few years ago a red rose sprang up in a Washington garden. No one knew whence it came or where it belonged, but when it blossomed its unusual richness and brilliancy drew attention to it at once, and after making sure that it was a distinct new variety it was christened American Beauty. Every one knows how popular the exquisite, sturdy-looking thing has since become, and few would guess that one of its best-known growers is already fearing its decline. With no apparent cause, the plants have failed in vigor of late, and instead of throwing out freely their long rich flower stems, they are inclined to bloom on short, dwarfish twigs that make the blossoms almost unlovely and quite unmarketable. And so the American Beauty bids fair to end as it began, in mystery, for the decline of flowers is usually a decline of favor rather than of merit, though it is a fact that artificially produced varieties of fruit have often been known to wear themselves out. A variety which cannot reproduce itself by seed is practically one plant, with a more or less limited term of existence. No matter how widely distributed its individuals may be, each is a cutting, a layer, a bud, or a graft, directly or indirectly from the original seedling; and, since even our grand forest trees, the longest-lived, hardiest simple outcomes of a seed, grow old, this great scattered growth ages, loses vigor, and dies at last.

Not only nature and science, but tradition, connect the rose with stranger woody forms, as is testified to by Sir John Maundeville, who started the fashion of traveling in the far East and of telling big stories about it. He picked up endless legends there, as modern wanderers gather bric-a-brac and relics, with charming faith in their antecedents, and brought home this bit of history: "Hamuel, a Jew in Bethlehem, once loved a beautiful maiden who did not love him. He was a brutal man, and when he saw that his suit was hopeless he denounced her as a demoniac. Demoniacs were burnt at the stake; but when her executioners started the fire about her the flames were miraculously turned away. The stake to which she was bound freshened and burst into flower, and as she lifted her grateful eyes heavenward there swayed above her the first roses that ever bloomed outside of Eden." In Maundeville's day, when science and miracle were very closely allied, scientists may have endorsed his theory of the rapid evolution of the rose from a different vegetable structure; but, if he had advanced it lately, even such a bold formulator as he would have offered it solely to poets. And yet the sudden quickening of a dry stake into flower is scarcely more wonderful than the changes that science itself has traced in the development of the blossom from the little branch.

While existing varieties are improved and developed by cultivation, new kinds are only produced by growth from the seed, and seedlings are vexatiously unreliable. Nature has a constant tendency to vary from the parent form, but when the parent has been modified by artificial conditions she also has an inclination to return, when possible, to the simple wild form. Cross fertilization has been found to remedy this inclination to a measure, and to give new combinations of qualities to the new individual, but even with its aid the seeking for new varieties is a tedious process. The seeds germinate uncertainly and slowly. When the little plants spring up they must be cared for two, three or even more years before their value can be seen; and then probably only one out of the hundreds will have enough originality to make it worth putting out in competition with the established kinds.

Although roses have been cultivated from time immemorial, the origination of new kinds seems to have been neglected until the beginning of this century. The first systematic effort to get improved roses from the seed is recorded at the time of that lover of roses, Empress Josephine Dupont, her gardener, was among the foremost in this effort. He grew seedlings from all the choicest roses that could be obtained from the other countries of Europe, yet in 1814 there were only 182 varieties, while in 1847 there were 4,000 and now their name is legion.—[Mary T. Earle, in New York Post.

LOOKING O'ER THE SEA.

Popular Loan Not Likely to be Placed in This Country.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The cabinet was in session yesterday from before 10 o'clock until after 2:45.

It is understood that almost the only subject of discussion was the pending bond issue. Several prominent New York bankers are here, and while they have not seen either the president or Mr. Carlisle, it is understood that their views on the situation were conveyed to the president.

No authoritative statement of the character of the cabinet discussion can be made, but it is believed that no final action has been determined upon. It is understood that negotiations with representatives of London bankers are now in progress, with indications of an early consummation. There is no longer any expectation of a popular loan to be placed in this country, as in that event the experience of the last few months would be repeated and the gold reserve again depleted.

The purpose of the administration is, it is understood, to place the entire issue of bonds with London bankers who would pay for them in gold, and thus avoiding, for the present at least, the necessity for paying out gold in exchange for legal tenders. While no definite conclusion has been reached, it is believed that the announcement of the sale of the bonds will be made at an early day.

The Debate on the Administration Bill to authorize the issue of $500,000,000 gold bonds for the purpose of retiring the legal tenders and the treasury notes began in the house yesterday and continued for six hours.

It developed widely divergent views at the outset. The silver Democrats and Populists opposed it outright. Some of the administration Democrats favored a substitute on the lines of the Carlisle bill, while Mr. Reed, the leader of the Republican minority, made a speech charging the present trouble to the deficiency in the revenue. Mr. Reed said that "to raise revenues would be confession, and confession might mean suicide."

He said that those in control of public affairs would have command of the revenue question for the next two years. The secretary of the treasury had just reported to the senate that he would have a surplus of $22,000,000. The secretary had given the last dollar of this surplus. Now, if the secretary had the surplus, the thing to do was to use it, and, instead of long-time gold bonds, issue certificates to be redeemable at any time.

Mr. Reed said he would send to the desk the plan he had formulated. It might be changed or modified. He was not insistent on having it considered as a substitute or in any other particular relative to the pending bill. But it avoided the question of putting a gold bond against the coin bond of the past; it avoided other complications promised by the original measure.

Reed's Remedy.

Section 1 of Mr. Reed's bill authorizes the secretary of the treasury to issue 3 per cent bonds, payable after five years, similar to the bonds issued under the resumption act. It is substantially similar to Mr. Sherman's bill introduced in the senate.

Section 2 embodies the new phase introduced by Mr. Reed, and is as follows:

That to enable the secretary of the treasury to pay the current expenses of the government, so long as the current revenues shall be deficient, he is authorized and required, from time to time, in his discretion, to issue, sell and dispose of at not less than par, such an amount of certificates of indebtedness of the denominations of $25, $50 and $100, or any multiple thereof, as may be needed for that purpose, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semi-annually and redeemable at the pleasure of the government in coin after two years from their date, with like qualities, privileges and exemptions provided in the act approved Jan. 14, 1875.

The secretary may at his discretion sell and dispose of the same for not less than an equal amount of lawful money of the United States, at designated depositories of the United States, and at such postoffices as he may select, and the secretary may use the proceeds thereof for the purpose provided for in this section and for none other.

The debate under the five-minute rule, when the bill will be open for amendment, begins today.

Senate Proceedings.

The senate session opened with a very breezy personal altercation between Mr. Mitchell of Oregon and Mr. Harris of Tennessee. The words "ungentlemanly" and "contemptible" were exchanged, and for a time it looked as though the senate chamber might witness a repetition of the belligerent scene in the house last week; but the conflict assumed a somewhat seriocomic aspect, and the senate soon relapsed into an uneventful consideration of routine business. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed after having been before the senate more than a week, and the discussion of the diplomatic and consular bill was begun.

Pleaded Not Guilty.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—Edmund Jordan, Annie Mahoney and John Jordan were arraigned yesterday for the murder of Janitor A. D. Barnes, whose mutilated body was found in a packing box last December. Jordan confessed to the killing, but will plead self-defense. All pleaded not guilty.

Mania For Killing Folks.

ATCHISON, Kan., Feb. 6.—James Nutt, a prominent farmer, shot and fatally injured Mrs. Frank Payton and a stranger. The cause is unknown. A few years ago Nutt shot and killed W. W. Dukes. Nutt is in jail.

KAISER LOVES BERLIN.

He Hopes, Therefore, That Her Citizens Will Remain True to Him.

BERLIN, Feb. 6.—Emperor William yesterday received a deputation of the municipal authorities who waited upon his majesty for the purpose of thanking him for his munificent offer to erect at his own expense a number of statues of prominent Germans in the Siege Sallee in the Tiergarten.

The emperor, replying to the deputation said he was very anxious that the historic memories of 25 years ago should be kept fresh in the minds of all Germans, especially those of the citizen class. In no city had the influence of a sovereign on its development and growth manifested itself so interestingly as in Berlin.

He hoped that the whole population, ... early, would in the future, especially in anxious times, hold steadfastly to their sovereign and make it easier for him to fulfill his duty.

Referring to general affairs, he mentioned the North sea canal, especially noting that owing to the wise arrangements for the workmen employed thereon, not a single complaint or note of discord had been heard during the progress of the great undertaking.

May Have Been a Fake.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Neither at the state department nor at the navy department has there come any word from China in confirmation of the reported capture by a Chinese mob of some of the officers of the United States steamship Concord, who accidentally killed a native while on a shooting expedition. This lack of an official report has strengthened the belief of officials that the story was either without foundation or else much exaggerated.

Likely to Be Smoothed Over.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Senor Romero, Mexican minister, had another conference yesterday with Secretary Gresham respecting the arrangement of the difficulties that have arisen between Mexico and Guatemala, and there is ample ground for the belief that the affair has now reached a phase were a peaceful adjustment is almost certain.

A Poverty-Stricken Prince.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6.—The Bulletin states on good authority that a reconciliation between the Princess and Prince Colonna is being arranged by Mrs. Mackay, the princess' mother. It is added that the prince's exchequer needs replenishment, and the princess will consent to a reunion for the sake of her children.

The Missing La Gascogne.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—The failure of the steamship La Gascogne to make her appearance in this port is the principal topic of discussion in steamship circles. The agents of the French line console themselves with the theory that some accident has happened to the vessel's machinery, some of which is almost new.

Not a Bad Job to Hold.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—Judge Jenkins, in the matter of the compensation of the three receivers of the Chicago and Northern Pacific railroad, has allowed the three officials—Morgan, Howland and Van Norden—$16,000 as a compensation up to Feb. 1 of this year. After that date the salaries are to be $7500 a year each.

A Love-Sick Young Woman.

HALIFAX, Feb. 6.—Gertrude Bently, the young woman who recently eloped from Liverpool with John Brown, will be taken back to England in accordance with directions from her father. Miss Bently says that if she thought Brown was to be separated from her forever she would commit suicide.

Rev. Mr. Coyle Dying.

DENVER, Feb. 6.—Rev. John P. Coyle, pastor of the First Congregational church, who came here from North Adams, Mass., three weeks ago to succeed Rev. M. W. Reed, is dangerously sick with muscular rheumatism of the heart. His physicians think there is little hope of his recovery.

Coming Before the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The senate committee on claims decided to report the amendment to the sundry civil bill providing for the sugar bounty claims of last year in order to allow it to come before the senate. The amount involved in the claims is estimated at $8,000,000.

St. Patrick Officials.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 6.—The St. Patrick Alliance elected the following officers: President, Joseph P. McKenna; first vice president, James Quinn; second vice president, Charles Burns; recording and financial secretary, James B. Carlos; treasurer, R. R. Hayes.

Loss of Over $100,000.

UTICA, N. Y., Feb. 6.—Fire started in Monson Bros.' foundry last night, and soon assumed gigantic proportions. The thermometer registered 10 below zero and the firemen labored under great difficulties on this account. The loss will reach $105,000.

Maine's New Collectors.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The senate in executive session confirmed the following nominations: John W. Deering, collector of customs, district of Portland and Falmouth, Me.; Aaron L. Simpson, collector of customs, Bangor.

Bad Weather For Sailors.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 6.—Incoming vessels report that the weather at sea is unusually severe, and all their crews are more or less frost-bitten. Minor disasters are being reported hourly.

Many Killed In the Streets.

KINGSTON, Jam., Feb. 6.—News has been received here of a revolutionary outbreak in Cartagena, Colombia, in which many persons are reported to have been killed in the streets.

Will Not Attend Parliament.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—Clement Higgins, M. P., a Liberal and Home Ruler, has informed the party whip that he will not attend the present session of parliament. This is a secession from the Liberal party.

B. Grain Trade Failure.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The Times announces the failure of Feldmann & Co., grain merchants, of Sebastopol. Their liabilities amount to 4..,000 roubles.

Now at $42,936,442.

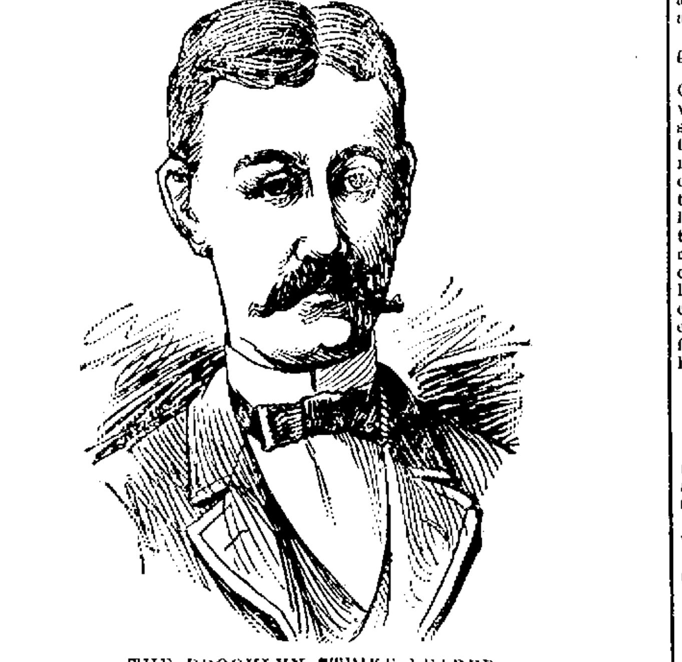

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The gold reserve, after deducting yesterday's withdrawals, is $42,936,442.

Miraculous Escape From Death.

KANSAS CITY, Kan., Feb. 6.—Two heavy trolley cars collided high up in the air on the elevated railway structure here. While the force of the collision was so great that the front platforms were demolished and one car shoved back off its trucks, neither car went off the structure. There was no loss of life. Motorman Jackman had his left foot smashed, and Motorman McNamore had his nose broken and face cut. Several others were slightly injured.

Two Dillon Men Got In.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The result of a ballot for the members who are to form the new parliamentary committee of the anti-Parnellite party was a little startling to the Healyites, only Mr. Healy being elected. The seat of Michael Davitt and that of Timothy D. Sullivan were filled by Messrs. Abraham and Condon, both Dillonites.

THE BROOKLYN STRIKE LEADER.

Before the great Brooklyn trolley strike Martin J. Connelly was an unknown motorman at a salary of $2 a day. As master workman of District Assembly No. 75, Knights of Labor, he conducted the great strike that called 8,000 militiamen into active service. He is widely known now, but has lost his $2 a day position.

THE GREAT AUK'S EGG.

A peculiar sound came from behind the newspaper in the corner of the railway carriage. It was a prolonged groan, followed by a string of adjectives, uttered in quick succession, like the reports from a six chambered revolver fired against time. I shifted my seat a little farther from the newspaper and let down the window, so as to be within reach of the communication cord should necessity arise. As I did so the paper fell on to the fat, drab knees, disclosing a red, clean shaven face and a pair of savage gray eyes.

The man in the corner appeared to have experienced a warm time of it behind the newspaper, for drops of perspiration stood like small glass beads on his high forehead, and his face was distorted by passion, which made him look anything but a desirable fellow passenger. I wished the train would reach a station. Even a slight accident to stay its headlong speed would have been welcome to enable me to put a few carriages between me and the man in the corner. But nothing of the kind happened, only my fellow passenger, after staring fiercely at me a few seconds, blurted out:

"Them sales of great auks' eggs make me wild. I hate the very name of 'em. They say the blooming bird is extinct, and the sooner them eggs are the better I shall like it."

I felt relieved that my fellow passenger wasn't a madman or in a fit, as I had been at first led to suppose. He was only laboring under a little excitement occasioned by reading an account of the recent sale of a couple of great auks' eggs.

I smiled and remarked that he was not a lover of great auks' eggs.

"No, dash 'em!" returned the man savagely. "I wish the whole 70 which they say are knocking about the world were burned up and the ashes scattered to the winds of heaven!"

I felt interested and longed to hear further particulars, so, taking out my cigar case, I handed it to him, at the same time venturing to inquire if he had ever had any dealings in great auks' eggs. I thought by his manner he had.

He paused a moment before answering, while he bit off the end of the cigar. "Well, yes—or, more strictly speaking, no," he said slowly. "But, there, it's a queer story." I looked interested, and after lighting up he began:

"It was one night some years ago I was accosted in the commercial road by a shabby fellow, who asked me to buy a queer looking thing which he held in his arms. It looked something between a football and an Edam cheese, as hard as adamant, and the color of a walnut peeler's hands. The man said he had just arrived in England from abroad, where many years of his life had been spent. The ball had been a present from some black king. He did tell me his name, but I forget it now. I know it took ten minutes to say it, and you had to sneeze twice at the end to pronounce it properly. The man didn't know what the ball was, but the king had valued it highly. I told him it was no use to me, but he begged so hard for enough to get him a night's lodging that I at last gave him a trifle for it and took the thing home, thinking it would do to keep the door open, if nothing else.

"For a long time the queer old thing was knocking about the house. It was useless for holding open the door. The only use it appeared to be was for people to fall over. I fell over it first and injured the bridge of my nose and knocked a leg off a table. My mother-in-law followed me over it a few days after and was laid up three weeks with a black eye and shock to the system. Then one of the kids let it on the cat's back, and though they say a cat's spine is made of india rubber it couldn't stand that ball and snapped. At last the baby made a desperate effort to rid the house of that dashed thing by eating it up and injured the only two teeth it possessed. My wife grew very indignant at this and said the injury to Obadiah's teeth was the last straw that made the load too heavy to bear, and she chucked the ball into the back yard, where it lay for months behind some boxes, forgotten and uncared for.

"It was a couple of days before the Derby, and a friend of mine had dropped in to arrange about going and how we were to raise the necessary funds, as we were at very low water. We were having a smoke together in the yard, while his little beggar of a dog was scraping about for rats, which existed only in his own imagination. In his search, among other things he laid bare was that old ball, which he sent rolling forward almost on to our toes.

"'Why, Bob, what have you got here?' cried Joe, bending down to examine it.

"'That's just what I want to know,' I said. 'It's a ball of mystery altogether.'

"Joe began scraping the dirt off with his foot and examining carefully. Then he began laughing fit to kill himself. 'It ain't a great auk's egg, eh, Bob?' he said.

"'No,' I says. 'I wish to goodness it was.'

"'If it don't happen to lay claim to that proud title, why don't you make it?'

"'What's the good?' I answered. I couldn't see what Joe was driving at.

"'Why,' said Joe, 'I was thinking it was just the article to suit that old fool, Billy Muster. Fake it up a bit and sell it to him as a great auk's egg. He'd never know the difference. At any rate, it wouldn't hurt him, and do us a deal of good.'

"I thought it a capital joke. We soon cleansed the old ball of the dirt and set about at once converting it into a great auk's egg by a good polishing up. I have never seen a great auk's egg and never want to, but I should think it was as near like one as you could make anything.

"Billy Muster was one of those fellows who wouldn't ever, as the saying is, 'set the Thames afire.' He had been in business once, and just as he had been on the verge of bankruptcy an obliging relative died and left him sufficient to pay off his debts and retire gracefully from business. He wisely didn't venture again, but gathered together the remainder of his money and was trying to do the independent gentleman in a tiny, gayly painted villa out Clapham way.

"The next morning we set out with the great auk's egg to pay Billy a visit. As we neared his abode we saw him doing the grand in his smoking cap and slippers in his six feet of front garden. 'Just taking my usual morning walk in the garden,' he remarked as we shook hands. We explained that we had got something special to show him, and he at once led the way into his pretty front parlor and bade us be seated.

"Joe placed the great auk's egg on the table and began relieving it of the six newspapers which had enshrouded it. It is always well to give worthless things a good packing; it lends such an air of value to 'em. Billy watched the sheet after sheet of paper being pulled off with great interest. As the last lot was peeled off, and the shiny, round, mahogany colored ball stood revealed, Muster rose from his chair and approached the table. 'What did you say it was?' he asked.

"'A great auk's egg,' chimed in Joe and I together.

"'A granorkseg,' repeated Billy, 'and what may they be used for?'

"'An ornament which no gentleman's house is complete without,' answered Joe.

"'Bless my soul, you don't say so!' said Muster. 'What won't they invent next? Well, at any rate, they are showy looking articles. What did you say the figure was?'

"'Five guineas,' answered Joe, 'and it's a bargain.'

"'Dear, dear,' said Billy, '5 guineas is a lot of money. Won't they make 'em cheaper? I could do with a couple of sizes smaller.'

"We laughed and said it was the only size kept in stock and further gave him to understand it was dirt cheap, several of them having been sold recently for over £100 each. 'Well, I never,' was all Muster could say. We could see he was greatly impressed with it and was dying almost to call it his. But he wanted something to bring him to the buying point. So Joe rose and began replacing the paper. 'I see, Mr. Muster,' he said, 'you ain't a buyer. If we go to any of the dealers, we can get three times as much as we have, out of pure friendship, agreed to accept from you. I thought, as you are now classed among the gentry, it would have been your greatest ambition to own a great auk's egg which, as I said before, no gentleman's house is complete without.'

"This fetched him. 'Stop a minute,' he cried, starting forward, 'you are in a blessed hurry. I tell you what I will do. I will give you £3 its.!'

"'No,' said Joe. 'It's no good, I see, haggling over such a bargain.'

"Muster grew very serious and came and took the parcel from Joe's hand and unwrapped the ball and gazed intently at it a few seconds. Then without a word he went to fetch the money.

"'Joe,' I said, in a whisper, 'you don't mean to let the old fellow pay over the money, do you?' for to tell the truth I didn't relish this kind of business.

"'No,' said Joe, 'of course I don't. What do you think? You know all is fair in business, love and war. Besides, it may, after all, be a valuable curiosity, as it belonged to a king, and worth the money.'

"Presently Muster reappeared and counted the money into Joe's hand, and we took our departure. 'It shall be a good day for us tomorrow,' said Joe, chuckling. Well, to make a long story short, we went to the Derby and blued every shilling of that five quid. We never experienced a worse run of luck in our lives. It was a sort of judgment on us, I thought at the time.

"A few days after Joe called round to see me. As he shook hands he laughed so much I thought he had gone a bit wrong under his hat. He said by way of explanation he had been to see old Muster and the great auk's egg. It appeared he had accidentally encountered the former, who seemed delighted to see him and insisted on his going indoors.

"One of the first things Joe's eyes lit on as he entered the little front parlor was the great auk's egg. A big hole had been made in the side, disclosing the fact that it was hollow. 'Been getting the yolk out, eh, Mr. Muster?' said Joe, laughing. 'Yes,' returned the old man in a pleasant tone. 'Was it yellow and fresh?' inquired Joe. 'Beautiful,' said Muster, beaming with pleasure all over his face. 'You don't regret your bargain?' queried Joe. 'No, no, that I don't,' returned the old man and got out some whisky and behaved like a brick.

"We both agreed the old fellow must be gone a bit wrong in the upper story.

"Soon after Billy Muster moved from Clapham and took a large house up west, where he lived for some years in good style. When asked by his friends where the money came from, he said he had made a very successful speculation. It was only when he shuffled off his mortal coil that I learned I had been fool enough to let a fortune slip through my fingers, for that blessed old great auk's egg was crammed with precious stones, which the curiosity of the old man had unexpectedly laid bare. It was supposed that a sailor coming off a long voyage had, in a drunken bout, lost a treasure which he brought from a foreign shore, and Billy Muster had luckily bought it."—London Tit-Bits.

A FATAL STEP.

They drove up the road in silence. Wilson had relapsed into his usual absent-mindedness, and Selina played with the silver handle of her parasol.

When the silence had lasted for a good while, Wilson broke it abruptly:

"What do you mean to do, then?" he asked. "Go back to town?"

"I don't know."

"But you must know," he said in his peremptory way, with his pleasant smile. "Don't you think," he went on, "don't you think, my dear, that you are just a little unreasonable? You have come here to spend a few days with my uncle and aunt. You like the country. You like everything until my cousin happens to come out to speak to me. Suddenly you conclude not to remain. Now, what would any ordinary person call that?"

"Jealousy," said Selina calmly. "Jealousy, I suppose. But it isn't that. I can be jealous of you in town if I wish. It isn't jealousy; it's intuition. I can't help it. It was just a look that flashed across her face—just a look."

Wilson laughed softly.

"Women are queer things," he said.

Half an hour later they were back at the vicarage. Miss Susan Fielding, who was not plain—beyond the fact that she had not the Dresden china delicacy of Selina Rogers—was sitting in the porch.

"Did you have a pleasant drive?" she inquired of Wilson.

"Ask Miss Rogers," he said good humoredly. "I always enjoy driving, especially here in the country."

Selina did not speak. She looked for a chair in the porch and made her way to it, trembling a little in the knees. Miss Susan and Willie Wilson stood talking by the carriage. She could not hear what they were saying. She was trying to reason with herself—trying to control and compel herself with a tremendous effort.

After a long time he came and sat beside her and spoke to her. Then she opened her eyes and smiled at him.

"All right now?" he asked in a tone of gentle raillery. "No more jealousy?"

"I think the sun must have affected me. It was terribly hot driving. I must go to my room and lie down."

She did not go down to dinner, but begged for a cup of tea to be sent up to her. And as dusk came on she still lay with her face to the pillow.

It was a rambling old house, with balconies on each story—and vines and rosebushes everywhere—an ideal place for lovers. Yet she did not wish to see Wilson again that evening, nor did he send asking if she would come down.

It was cool and quiet. The only subdued noise was the water of the sound, nearly a mile away, washing softly on the pebbles—the only sound.

It might have been midnight when she heard voices. And one was the voice of her lover.

She stepped through the window to the upper balcony. The night was cloudy. No one could see her in the shadow of the deep green trees. And then, listening, she heard her own name spoken by Susan Fielding.

She listened intently. There was no dishonor in her intention. Now she should know the truth and know what to do.

"Sometimes," said Wilson slowly, "sometimes we cannot help ourselves, Susan. We would like to do one thing and we drift through circumstances into a directly opposite direction. Men love one woman and marry another. They have to make the best of it."

Then Susan's voice, thick with reproachful tears, slightly tremulous, yet with an effort at defiance:

"It was her money, I suppose. Money always attracts men."

"Some men. The people I have loved most in my life have not had a penny," he answered. "Susie, don't make life harder for me. It is hard enough to see your tears and feel that"—

He broke off suddenly. He must have heard the sob of anguish, the dry sob with which the heart of Selina Rogers broke in that instant in the balcony above.

"What's the matter?" whispered Susan Fielding, clinging to him.

"Hush! Nothing. Go into the house quickly."

He remained out a little longer, walked away from the house and gazed up at where he supposed Selina's window to be.

The hours crept on. It was not yet dawn. Selina Rogers had lighted a candle and sat writing. When she had finished, the note was brief. It was addressed to William Wilson.

"My dear friend, I am feeling very ill and think that the sun has given me a slight stroke. I shall rise early—very early—and walk to the sound, hoping the salt air will do me good. If anything should happen to me, I must tell you that I long since made a will in your favor, having no near relatives or truer friend than yourself."

Then the candle went out, and Selina Rogers crept quietly from the house and down the silent road toward the water.

It was not Susan Fielding, but a servant, who went up and found the letter in the mirror frame. It was 9 o'clock, and she had not returned.

Wilson, when he had read the note, stood like a stone image. Then he saw the stableman coming round from the stable.

"Put a saddle on my horse!" he cried huskily. "Quick, for goodness' sake!"

Half way to the beach he met some men bringing up her body on a stretcher. He got off his horse and fell fainting on the road.

He did not marry Susan Fielding or any other woman, but died himself a year or two later. Susan had married another six months after Selina's death.

DEATH OF REV. DR. H. A. COIT.

Rev. Henry A. Coit, D. D., LL. D., rector of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., died in Concord yesterday, of pneumonia, after an illness of two weeks. Dr. Coit was well known in this vicinity, having a summer residence on Indian avenue in Middletown, near near the Edwin Booth place, and having preached frequently in the Protestant Episcopal churches in this city and Middletown.

Dr. Coit was born in Wilmington, Del., January 20, 1830, and was educated at St. Paul's School, College Point, Long Island, and at the University of Pennsylvania. His first ministerial duties were as missionary in Clinton county, New York, and in 1856 was chosen first rector of St. Paul's School, which has since become the leading preparatory institution of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, having now twenty masters and about three hundred pupils. In 1867 he was elected president of Trinity College, to succeed Rev. Dr. Kerfoot, but, although the acceptance of this office was pressed on him by the bishops of his church and by many influential persons, declined the honor, preferring to go on with the work which he had undertaken. In 1871 Dr. Coit was elected to the presidency of Hobart College, a position which he declined for the same reason. In 1863 Dr. Coit was made a doctor of divinity by Trinity College, and very recently he was given the honorary degree of doctor of laws by Yale University. He was a trustee of Trinity. Dr. Coit was married in 1856 to Miss Mary Bowman Wheeler of Philadelphia, who died a few years ago. Four of their children are living.

His brother, Joseph Howland Coit, was professor of mathematics and natural science in St. James' College, Maryland, until the closing of that institution in 1865, and later was associated with his brother in St. Paul's School. James Minor Coit, another brother, is a well-known teacher of chemistry.

DEATHS IN JANUARY.

The total number of deaths reported in Newport during January was twenty-seven, thirteen being males and fourteen females, twenty-three of native and four of foreign parentage. Of the decedents, two were under one year old, one between three and five years, two each between five and ten and between ten and fifteen, one between fifteen and twenty, three each between twenty and thirty and between forty and fifty, five between fifty and sixty, one between sixty and seventy, six between seventy and eighty, and one between eighty and ninety. The largest number of deaths from any one cause was four, from heart disease; there were three from Bright's disease, two each from pneumonia and senile exhaustion, and one each from apoplexy, cerebral apoplexy, chronic gastritis, convulsions, croup, nephritis, old age, peritonitis, pulmonary phthisis, scarlet fever, senile gangrene, typhoid fever and uraemia. The causes of three deaths were not given in the physician's returns. The total number of deaths, twenty-seven, in an estimated population of twenty thousand, is at an annual death rate of 16.2 in each thousand inhabitants.

MIDDLETOWN.

[Regular correspondence of the News.]

Yesterday proved to be by far the coldest day of the winter. The thermometer registered 8° above in the morning, and at night was down to 4°. The wind caused the snow to be piled in great drifts, to the tops of the walls in some places, while it left the roads bare in others. The men who worked on the roads to make them passable had their work to do a second time this morning, as the wind caused the snow to soon fill them again. This morning was colder still, the thermometer registering 6° below zero, and on account of the drifted snow the milkmen found it much more difficult to reach the city than it was yesterday.

Miss Lulu Barker is confined to her house by a severe cold.

The Middletown carrier of the Daily News succeeded in delivering the papers on his route yesterday. He found that road so blocked with snow that it was impossible to force his way through, and he was compelled, though reluctantly, to return to Newport, with only a part of his route delivered.

Miss Mary Pearce is visiting Mrs. Phoebe Smith on Paradise avenue.

Notwithstanding the severe cold and bitter wind yesterday, the ice men were busy cutting and storing ice on the ponds.

Mr. Lyman Barker, who has been ill, is convalescent.

Mrs. Henry Smith and her daughter, Miss Lillie Smith, are guests of Mrs. Alden Barker.

Mrs. Eliza Clarke, who has been guest at Mr. Rowland Lewis's, has returned to her home in Pawtucket.

LOCAL BRIEFS.

—The sleighing is excellent.

—Mr. D. B. Reynolds is reported as somewhat better.

—The Block Island boat has not yet made a trip from the island this week.

—Miss Muenchinger entertained the No Name Whist Club at her home on Bellevue avenue last evening.

—The reception by the pupils of Professor Frederick's will be at Music Hall instead of Masonic Hall, as previously announced.

—Commodore Wallace gave a dance at the Naval Station last night. The intense cold prevented many would-be guests from attending.

—This evening Charles E. Lawton Post will hold a camp fire in Grand Army hall, to which Gen. G. K. Warren Post has been invited.

—The Salvation Army will hold special services in its hall this and tomorrow evenings, when Captain Corp of Pawtucket will be present.

—There were some very pretty frost designs on Thames street shop windows last night and today, but few appeared to care to stop and admire them.

—It is understood that Mr. Sidney Webster of New York has taken a cottage here for the season of 1895. Mr. Webster occupied Colonel Fearing's villa on Narragansett avenue in 1893.

—The members of St. Mary's guild of St. John's Church gave a reception in the reading room of the church last evening, in honor of Mrs. I. P. White's return from her trip abroad. A short address was made by Rev. E. L. Buckey.

—Mr. Charles L. Walker, who gave his magic mirror entertainment before an interested audience last July at the Second Baptist Church, has been secured to give another exhibition, with an entirely different program, tomorrow evening.

—This evening from 8 to 10 o'clock the new armory will be open for the inspection of the public. The Newport Band will give a promenade concert, and the members of both Company B and the naval reserves will be present to show visitors about.

—Officer Crane reports almost impassable snow drifts on Malbone road and Sheffield avenue, and that a wagon was found stuck in the former thoroughfare, it being necessary to detach the horse. The letter carrier was unable to deliver all his mail matter in that section of the city yesterday afternoon.

—The entertainment which the young men of the Thames Street Methodist Episcopal Church have arranged will consist of readings by Mr. Henry W. Rankin, violin solo by Mr. John O. Rogers, cornet solo by Mr. Frank Boldy, piano duet by Messrs. Young and Greason, and selections by the Ariel Mandolin Club.

—About 3:20 o'clock this morning Officer Davis discovered a fire in the chimney of the Fladder block on Bellevue avenue, and when it was found impossible to extinguish the flames the emergency corps was summoned. The chimney took fire again this morning at 9 o'clock, but was quickly discovered by Officer Albro, and soon extinguished.

—At 2:10 o'clock this morning, Officer Dugan saved a man from freezing to death. He found the man, who proved to be Simon Lanigan, in a ditch on Parker avenue. He was asleep, and under the influence of liquor. The ambulance was telephoned for, and the man conveyed to the Police Station and cared for. His hands, feet and ears were found to be badly frozen.

—At the Artillery range last evening the regular rifle team of the company was beaten in a friendly contest with the "Dark Horses," 240 to 235. The scores were as follows: "Dark Horses"—J. C. Weaver, 42; H. M. Ackers, 37; A. A. Barker, 40; H. C. Stevens, Jr., 38; H. R. Peckham, 45; R. G. Bissel, 38; total, 240. Company team—H. Bliss, 42; J. J. Peckham, 41; J. R. Austin, 39; G. F. Bliss, 38; M. Muenchinger, 37; H. G. Bliss, 38; total, 235.

PORTSMOUTH.

[Regular correspondence of the News.]

Mrs. Coomer A. Easterbrooks went to Providence Tuesday morning, to visit her daughter, Mrs. James M. Usher. Her daughter, Miss Jennie M. Easterbrooks, has gone to New York for a week's stay.

It is reported, on what seems to be good authority, that William F. Thomas, youngest son of Charles G. Thomas, and Miss Ellie Oswell, daughter of Israel H. Oswell, were married Sunday, February 3, and have gone to housekeeping in the house on Childs lane belonging to the groom's father.

We hear that Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Thurston are proving the correctness of the saying that a baby in the house is a well spring of pleasure, but as they have tried it but a few days perhaps they are not ready to report yet.

Tuesday was decidedly the roughest day of the winter thus far. The snow blew all day, and some good sized banks were formed, which hindered travel to a great extent. Constant C. Chase failed to reach Bristol Ferry to meet the boat at night, something that has very seldom happened in the many years that he has been driving on the route. The thermometer rose but a little above 10 degrees during the day and fell very fast about sunset, and at 10 o'clock stood at zero.

The will of the late Cornelia Maria Jackson of Providence bequeathes $70,000 to Tufts College, to be used for the erection of a building to be designated the "Cornelia M. Jackson College for Women," and "to provide for the instruction of women in the duties and privileges of American citizenship, and in the theory and working of the United States government." It also bequeathes $500 to the building fund of the Sophia Little Home, $5,000 to the church of the Mediator in Providence, and $8,000 to establish two free beds at the Rhode Island Homoeopathic Hospital; and, after several personal bequests, the residue of the estate is left to the Rhode Island Homoeopathic Hospital and to Tufts College.

CITY COUNCIL.

the blame belonged to himself. The resolution making a three-year term was finally adopted.

A resolution was passed, authorizing a pipe sewer in Rhode Island avenue, at a cost of $700.

The resolution proposed by the highway committee, requesting the board of aldermen to condemn the land necessary for and lay out a "water" street from Long wharf to Commercial wharf, under the highway act, caused another lively tilt in the lower branch. Mr. Hamilton said it is useless to widen Thames street unless it could be made to accommodate four teams. This could not be done. A "water" street, which must eventually come, seems the only other way of affording relief. Mr. Hughes said Thames street is the place to work on, it should be widened, and can be. The committee had not gone about the matter right; they wanted the abutters to pay for the work. Mr. Tanner said it would not harm anything to let the resolution go to the aldermen for their consideration. Mr. Carr asked if this resolution did not commit the council to this plan. Mr. Sweeney said it would be cheaper to widen Thames street, and that is what should be done. The summer residents want that street wider, and the work should be done there. Why not try the betterment act on Thames street, instead of a "water" street, that no one wants? The resolution was finally laid on the table.

The petition of T. T. Pitman and others was recommended to be referred to the board of aldermen. Some one asked what it was about, and was told that it asked for the widening of Thames street. Mr. Tanner asked what process the highway committee had used in arriving at its decision. Mr. Sweeney said this was a chance for that betterment act to come in. The petition was referred.

The petition of E. T. Bosworth and others, for curbing Lincoln street, was referred to the highway committee, with power to act.

Petitions of W. W. Marvel and others, for repairs and a flag walk on Willow court; and of Henry Bedlow and others, for grading, curbing and repairing Malbone road, from Broadway to Malbone gate, were referred to the highway committee.

A petition was received asking that Ruggles avenue, east from Bellevue avenue, receive attention. The signers were Messrs. I. Townsend Burden, J. P. Kernochan, John W. Ellis, W. S. Wells, J. J. Wysong, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Gordon McKay, and Mrs. Frederick Pearson and Mrs. Kernochan. It was referred to the highway committee, with power to act.

Councilman Vaughan moved to take from the table the report of the ordinance committee on the police pension bill. An aye and nay vote was called for, and the motion was lost: Ayes—Messrs. Sweeney, Young, Hughes, Vaughan and Sullivan, 5. Nays—Mr. President Comstock, Messrs. Carr, Hamilton, Stevens, Tanner, Barker, Moitt, Wilbur and Allan, 9.

JOINT CONVENTION.

The two boards met in joint convention for the election of certain officers.

Councilman Tanner nominated Charles S. Freeborn to be a member of the emergency force, and he was elected.

Councilman Hamilton nominated B. C. Brown to be clerk of the highway committee, and Councilman Vaughan nominated F. P. Lynch, the present clerk, and spoke in favor of his retention. Mr. Hughes said an ordinance was before the council in relation to this case, but Alderman Hammett said the action of the council had killed that ordinance. Mr. Tanner spoke in favor of retaining Mr. Lynch, who to his personal knowledge is a competent and satisfactory official. Mr. Hamilton called for an aye and nay vote on Mr. Brown's nomination, but with two names presented a ballot was necessary. Brown received eight votes, and Lynch had eleven, and was declared re-elected.

William H. Harvey, George A. Hazard, Timothy P. Crowley, John Howard, Joshua Hammond and Timothy Buckley were elected surveyors and measurers of lumber.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

In the board of aldermen the resignation of Henry Gladding as commissioner of wrecks, because such an office is likely to interfere with his duties as harbor master, was received and accepted.

The city clerk was authorized to prepare and have printed preliminary voting lists, for the official canvasses.

E. Voigt was granted a pool table license.

The mayor announced the appointment of the following special policemen: Timothy Burns, James Melvin and Thomas James. They were confirmed. Alderman Hammett said he understood that Thomas James is beyond the legal age, and Mayor Waters said it was so; he is too old to be made a member of the permanent force.

The council adjourned to Tuesday evening, March 5, at 7:30 o'clock.
